THE PASTOR'S POST:

Will Parishes Survive?

I wish I could answer that question with a resounding –‘Yes, of course parishes will survive’. We’ve been through tougher times and always bounced back. We are resilient people and won’t let something like low numbers of clergy or poor Mass attendance put an end to parish life. But while I can say that I believe what I have just written, I am certain that parish life as we have known it for many years will not look the same in the near future. As a faith community we are subject to the same sociological changes as the rest of the world. People’s needs, expectations, values and beliefs change, and as a result the institutions and structures that support these values and beliefs must also change. While the truths that underpin these beliefs never alter, it would be irresponsible to continue to operate as if nothing has changed, or to believe that people will come to their senses eventually and things will get back to the way they were, or more truthfully, the way we wish they were.

Putting the impact of the pandemic to one side for the moment, the indicators of a need for a change in our Church structure have been clear for some time. The importing of priests from Nigeria and India was seen as a temporary help, just until we got our own vocation campaigns for locally grown vocations working again. While these generous men have been able to starve off the days when we may have had to close down or at least cut down on certain parish activities, it created the false impression that we would always be able to find priests when we needed them, even if we had to import them. Vocations among Australian born men and women continue to plummet, while the responsibilities and areas to be covered continues to grow for the aging clergy still working.

With the substantial growth in Catholic schools and student numbers, we incorrectly assumed these school populations, children and parents, would actually participate in the life of their faith beyond the school grounds i.e. Sunday Mass. Church-based youth groups have had to compete with secular youth activities like sport, music, fashion and a huge range of artistic pursuits as well as the almost compulsory-part time job at Maccas. Church leaders neglected to understand that faith participation became just another involvement for young people and their families, not necessarily a priority, as it used to be.

One of the hidden impacts of why the present operation of our parishes will need to change is that tainted thing called money. The Catholic Church is poor. Now to the average Catholic that statement is outrageous. Surely the Catholic Church has to be one of the richest corporations in the world. It is a worldwide global enterprise. It's rolling in money. Think of those glorious cathedrals and churches. All that artwork. All the bejewelled chalices and gold spun vestments. Well just a slight bit of common sense will contradict these statements. None of that wealth is liquid. Who will buy a broken down historic cathedral or an art piece by Raphael? Would it raise school fees or close down poor parishes, and in some cases, whole dioceses, if it had sufficient funds?

Contrary to popular opinion our church is not a worldwide financial empire. Every diocese is an independent legal corporation unto itself and raises its own money. The Vatican does not send out any money to a struggling diocese, and while some dioceses are better placed than others, most dioceses run at a deficit. Add to this the enormous legal fees and lawsuits that have resulted from paedophilia suits and the substantial costs associated with safeguarding the vulnerable and workplace health and safety requirements, and a more realistic picture is emerging.

One substantial change that has resulted from our aging congregations is the vast army of volunteers, which parish life has relied on for centuries. Older parishioners, while incredibly generous with their time, are finding health issues as well as family commitments of baby-sitting and assisting their working children, has made them time-poor when it comes to being available to church. Finding qualified people to provide advice and services on a voluntary basis and at little or no cost, is a phenomenon of a bygone era.

A recent conversation from a parishioner, neatly summed up how many people are feeling about their parish and the Church in general. "We know that things will have to change, but we hope, I hope, I don't lose my Mass." The celebration of the Eucharist will be the last sacred gathering to go, if at all, but the "when, where and who" of how people will gather will change, and the change is not far away. Parish life will look very different in the future, but the Church will not die. That will only happen when God stops breathing life into our world and the Holy Spirit sees the last human die.

ALL WELCOME.*

Our next session will be on Tuesday 8th June at 6pm
in the Parish Hospitality Room.

If you would like to participate in this please ring 0409 486 326. This is a great opportunity for us to reflect, discuss, share and enrich our faith and relationship with Christ.

STEWARSHIP REFLECTION - Feast of Corpus Christi

“Then he took a cup, gave thanks, and gave it to them and they all drank from it.” - Mark 14:23

Jesus, the perfect steward, gave thanks, just before He gave Himself up for us, completely for our salvation. He offers us the same chance to drink from His cup. In the bread and wine, we meet Christ personally. If we follow Him, drinking from His cup means our own self-sacrifice, using all of our gifts for the benefit of others and to do His work on earth.

The vision of Stewardship speaks in every aspect of life, inviting everyone to be thankful, generous and accountable for what each has been given.

TAKE FIVE FOR FAITH: Don’t think less of others

Poor James the Lesser. The other apostle named James—the Greater—got the better nickname. We don’t even know anything about James the Lesser, other than his name and that Jesus picked him to be one of the 12—but that alone speaks volumes about this James. We’ve all experienced what it feels like to have labels attached to us that make us feel less in the eyes of others, if we even feel seen or known at all. But God looks past those labels to the truth of our identity. That’s where you’ll find your value and dignity, even if others don’t seem to. Remember that, like James, you are God’s chosen.

(John 14:6-14. “Do you not believe that I am in the Father and the Father is in me?”).

PARISH FINANCIAL SUPPORT

Your support is needed to help our Parish to continue valuable pastoral activities and to provide ongoing sustainability. To assist you to support the Parish, you can give via <http://parishgiving.brisbanecatholic.org.au>

If you are able to continue to support us, we would be most grateful. For all those who have been making payments via credit card and those who have donated directly into the parish account, we thank you. The spirit of generosity is alive in our Parish. If you would like confirmation of your donation or a receipt emailed to you please contact me at man.surfers@bne.catholic.net.au.

 Our beautiful timber stands in the church are “pay-waves.” (“tap-and-go” machines). A handy new way of donating to the parish - just tap a credit card or bank card on the sensor and it takes $5. And once it has processed this first tap, (which may take 30 seconds), you can tap it again, to give another $5, and so on. A safe and handy way to give money. God bless you for your support. To join planned giving, please contact the Parish Office: (07) 5572 5433 (9am–12pm Mon-Fri)

POPE FRANCIS: Institutes a new ministry for Catholic Lay People.

Pope Francis creates a new “ministry” for Catholic lay people. By formally instituting the “lay ministry of Catechist”, the pope tries to redefine the place of the laity in a Church he sees as being too clerical.

“I establish the lay ministry of Catechist.” With these few words, Pope Francis hopes to fundamentally change the Catholic Church from within. The words appear at the very end of a six-page “motu proprio” he published on Tuesday. Antiquum ministerium (ancient ministry), as the text is titled, effectively opens another new ministry to the laity.

The move comes after Francis' decision last

January to officially extend the functions of acolyte and lector to women.

With this new document he wishes to recognize the place of the hundreds of thousands of “competent” lay catechists who already “carry out a mission invaluable for the transmission and growth of the faith”. The institutionalization of this role, which Paul VI had already envisioned in 1972, has not been widely followed in the Church up to till now. Often associated with the Churches of the South, this ministry never really developed in Europe and North America. Half a century later, the current pope now wants to expressly and more firmly “invite” the bishops to make this instituted ministry “effective”.

He asks them to call “men and women of deep faith and human maturity” to this stable ministry. He says pastors should look for people who are “active participants in the life of the Christian community and are capable of welcoming others, being generous and living a life of fraternal communion”. These future catechists should then be given a “suitable biblical, theological, pastoral and pedagogical formation”, the pope says. Fundamental cultural change, some see this as fundamental cultural change in a Church that, since the Middle Ages, has been marked by the presence of many priests. “We are heirs to a time when priests were plentiful and the laity were always put aside.

It's a complete and very profound change of mentality,” claims Jesuit priest and theologian Cesare Giraudo.

A retired professor of Pontifical Oriental Institute in Rome, the 80-year-old Italian is convinced that Francis is inviting Catholics to invent new roles for the laity in order to “shake up a Church that is too clericalized” . “In the last few centuries, many different missions have found their way into the hands of priests, thanks to their numbers,” acknowledges Archbishop Vincent Dollmann of Cambrai in northern France, a former official at the Congregation for Catholic Education (2009-2012).

Archbishop Hervé Giraud, a former seminary rector and expert in priestly formation, agrees. “Bishops and priests have too many powers that are far from their primary function,” says the 64-year-old head of the Archdiocese of Sens in central France. Archbishop Dollmann, 56, also spent many years working in seminaries in France and Rome. He believes this exclusively lay ministry should make it possible, as a mirror image, for the ordained priesthood to “rediscover its specificity” .

“ The pope is making us aware that not everything revolves around the ordained ministry,” another French bishop told La Croix. By promoting these lay ministries, the pope is also helping to redefine the role of the priest. “An opportunity to be seized” The question now is how to ensure that Pope Francis' initiative does not remain a dead letter on the ground, considering it had little success in the 1970s after Paul VI's original promptings. “The lack of priests is now felt much more strongly in the West. And to be alive, the community needs ministers,” says Cesare Giraudo. “As for mission countries, the Church has experimented with ways of doing things that can be reproduced, especially in the formation of catechists,” the Italian Jesuit suggests.

Arnaud Join-Lambert, professor of theology at the University of Louvain, says that these lay ministries promoted by the pope also constitute “an opportunity to be seized, provided that two pitfalls are overcome”

First of all, he notes that there is “inertia” inherent in any organization, and even more so in the Catholic Church. Archbishop Giraud agrees, but he also believes he should not act alone. “Personally, this question of ministries seems urgent to me, but I prefer to act in collegiality with the other bishops,” he says.

The second risk, according to Join-Lambert, is to reduce these new ministries to a simple reinterpretation of existing roles. Opening a perspective On the ground, some bishops seem determined to take up the pope's invitation immediately. For instance, Archbishop Giraud already has someone in mind to whom he'll propose the new ministry of catechis. “This can only apply to a very small number of people,” he cautions, adding that it should not be seen as a “reward” , but as a “service to all” . All the bishops interviewed by La Croix believe Francis has opened up a perspective that goes far beyond the ministry of catechist. “The fears surrounding the word ministry have been lifted, which will make it possible to give titles that indicate recognition of a gift from God, rather than an internal organization,” insists Archbishop Giraud.

"This opens up a lot of possibilities for me," agrees Archbishop Dollmann. He sees this as an opportunity to emphasize that "not everything is centered on the Eucharist" . "People must be able to feed on Jesus in the word of God," he points out. Dollman also wonders if there might not be a way to officially commission those Catholic faithful who regularly organize funerals. "All this needs to be accomplished while making sure that these functions are not institutionalized too much," he adds. This is a way of being vigilant over the issue of clericalizing the laity, which the pope explicitly warns against in the "motu proprio" . It encourages committed lay people. It also recognizes and promotes them, but without perpetuating a clerical pattern that Francis, since the very beginning of his pontificate, has said the Church must overcome.

The "motu proprio" tries to strike a healthy balance, insisting that the ministry of catechist must be "carried out in a fully 'secular' manner, avoiding any form of clericalization" . "An authentic lay vocation" Precisely to avoid these mistakes, these new ministries should be considered as "an authentic lay vocation, which can flourish throughout a lifetime" , noted Archbishop Rino Fisichella, president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting the New Evangelization, at the launch of the new "motu proprio" .

Basically, these instituted ministries are much more than a simple recognition of services that are already rendered by lay people in their parishes or dioceses. "This institution is done by means of a rich liturgy, which emphasizes that it is a vocational mission, which comes from God," says Join-Lambert. The Louvain theologian believes the pope's new initiative "could change many things in the understanding of the Church, made up of all the baptized for the mission of announcing the Gospel and the faith" . In any case, Francis intends to go all the way and not let this decision remain hanging. At the end of the "motu proprio" he urges all bishops to take up this text and establish, country by country, the appropriate formation programs. And he instructs the Congregation for Divine Worship to publish a "Rite of Institution" for this new lay ministry. The 84-year-old pope says the congregations should do this "soon"

THE GOSPEL THIS WEEKEND

Our Lord wanted his life, death and resurrection to be a source of life and salvation for all people of every time and generation. The Christian faith believes in God who becomes flesh... the incarnation... so it is perfectly fitting that Jesus gives us a way we can touch and taste the reality of his loving involvement in the many joys and sorrows, graces and challenges of our daily life.

The sacrament of the body and blood of Our Lord was first instituted at the Lord's Last Supper, before he suffered his passion. He celebrated the annual tradition of the Passover meal, in which generations of God's people repeated the meal commemorating the freeing of the people of Israel from slavery in Egypt. According to that God-given tradition, everyone who participated in that sacred meal was included and united in God's saving action, irrespective of the time or place in which that person was joining-in.

Fast forward a thousand or so years and Our Lord, who has come to perfect and fulfil the Law of God, also celebrates this ancient Passover feast. But, near the end of the meal, he does something new... something that makes this Passover meal his own and which creates the means by which we can all be included in his love and salvation. He took bread, blessed it and said.... see this bread.... this is truly my body broken for you ... take and eat... do this in memory of me. Then he took a chalice of wine and blessed it and gave it to his disciples and said... take this and drink of it.... this is the chalice of my blood... poured out for you and for many... to forgive sins... do this as a memorial of me.

This action means that we, some two thousand years after his supper, are all included in the benefits that Christ won for us by his love.

We live in a deeply sacramental world ... so many things in this world bring us the reality of what they signify... a warm handshake of friendship is a sacrament in a sense of friendship which actually gives us the expression and feeling of the friendship it represents....

Jesus, in his wonderful ministry, ate and drank with so many people. He shared meals with sinners, He included people of every different group. He healed, he welcomed, he taught and he cared for all.

It is fitting that Jesus left us the gift of this holy meal, as more than a reminder of him and his ministry... but this meal presents to us, by his own promise and command, his very self, given for us. As we take the host we are receiving Jesus into our hearts and lives, as we drink his chalice, we are washed clean and joined to God and one another. Now, we all can be part of what Our Lord offered first to his apostles.

The gift of the Eucharist is essential in the life of all Christians. We are receiving Christ himself in his word, in the weekly scripture readings, and we receive Christ truly in his body and blood in communion. .... We are opening up weekly the meaning and implication of the scriptures and ensuring that it is not just our convenient and comfy version of Jesus' word, but His challenging message that spurs us on to action week after week....

I always like to say to First Holy Communion classes as they receive Jesus in communion for the first time... that "there is only one thing better than one's first holy communion ... and that is your second holy communion..... and there is only one thing better than second holy communion and that is your third.... and so on...and so on.....weekly..... It sets up a pattern of communion with Christ in our daily life...

Our communion in the Body and Blood of Christ connects us forever to God... and to our loved ones..... every time we celebrate Eucharist and every time we receive the body and blood of Christ, we are united, in communion and connected by an unbreakable bond to God, first and foremost... (through Jesus), but also we are connected to our loved ones.. and friends.. and fellow Christians..... and we are even connected to our departed loved ones who are all part of the communion of believers.... Alive in Christ... forever... Today we celebrate Jesus, who makes his home in us, through the sacrament of his body and blood... This is a gift that is truly priceless.

Next Sunday's Readings

Readings for Eleventh Sunday in Ordinary Time. Year B

FIRST READING: Ezek 17: 22-24

Ps 92: 2-3, 13-14, 15-16. "Lord it is good to give thanks to you."

SECOND READING: 2 Cor 5: 6-10

GOSPEL ACCLAMATION ((no bibl. ref.)). Alleluia, alleluia! The seed is the Word of God, Christ is the sower. All who come to him will live forever.

GOSPEL: Mark 4: 26-34

"The Archdiocese of Brisbane holds that children and vulnerable adults are a gift from God with an intrinsic right to dignity of life, respect and security from physical and emotional harm. They are to be treasured, nurtured and protected from any harm." As a Parish Community, we pray for a change of heart, that we respond to our grief by reaching out to one another in truth and love.

Acknowledgement of Country:

We respectfully acknowledge Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people as the First Peoples of this country, and especially acknowledge the traditional owners on whose lands we live and work throughout the Catholic Archdiocese of Brisbane. And here in this parish of Surfers Paradise, we particularly acknowledge and pay our respects to the Kombumerri clan of the Yugambeh people of the Gold Coast.

We also acknowledge Elders, past and present and pay tribute to those who have contributed to the social, economic, cultural, political and spiritual life of our community. This acknowledgement affirms our commitment to social justice and the importance of healing and reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples.
