Guiding questions to support planning, revising, and refining of a case study
Please make brief notes in response to those questions below that are relevant to your context, add others as appropriate, and decide the order in which you will address them to communicate effectively with your audience. Examples of how authors have answered these questions from learning and teaching publications in this genre are presented in Healey et al (2020). Alternatively, you are welcome to submit a proposal in the form of an abstract or summary of around 300 words. Whichever way you choose to compile your proposal, please ensure that you tell us how it relates to students as partners; what you are adding to the discourse on students as partners; and why it is relevant to an international readership.
1. What is this case study of? 2. Why should your case study matter to other scholars? 3. What is the context of your case study (e.g., discipline, institution, nation)? 4. From whose perspective is the case study written? Who was involved in the practice? 5. What did your practice look like? 6. How did you collect evidence about impacts of your practice? 7. What were the outcomes arising from the practice described in your case study? 8. What lessons have you learned, and what will you do differently as a result? 9. What are the implications for others in different contexts?
Key references Please cite the key references which underpin the rationale and argument of your submission
