

Jeff Casey

Jeff Casey is a servant-leader who is passionate about student success and supporting quality educators. He is currently the high school principal at University High School in Greeley, where he has served for the past 12 years. He is a proud husband, and father of two girls. His wife Joy is also a lifelong educator who got her first teaching job right here in Briggsdale where we have deep family connections. Their oldest daughter is a sophomore at Biola University in Los Angeles, and their youngest daughter will be a freshman at California Baptist this coming fall.

Jeff comes from a long line of educators on both sides of his family. Both grandmas were teachers, and one grandpa was an education professor at UNC after starting out as a middle school math teacher following World War II. His dad continues as a flight instructor for missionaries in Alaska. Jeff inherited a passion for students that led him to a career that started out as a youth pastor and then moved into education. Loving math and history helped, and he has a passion for experiential learning for students of all ages. As his career has progressed, he continues to love serving students and so many great educators who share a love for students.

Jeff earned a Master's degree from the University of Northern Colorado in Educational Leadership and Policy Studies. He is also a proud graduate of Platte Valley High School in Kersey, and a Colorado native. Before going to University, Jeff was a middle school principal, middle school social studies teacher, middle school math teacher, baseball coach and bus driver. Whether attending games, covering a class, leading a hiring committee, supporting professional development, or driving a bus, Jeff's goal is to lead and serve.
