On Asphalt Bones... Hearsay.

INQUISITOR

A seal tears, someplace hidden, Exposing a hungry mouth, a Throat, visible a ways down, ends with blackness
And beckons to whomever may listen.

The teeth protrude from the inner circle,
Scattering about the iris like
glass shards,
And littering the ciliary walls
Like an awful, cosmic artwork
That grows in scale and in size And threatens to engulf the world
As the eye draws closer Still a thousand miles away Although you feel its breath on your neck.

Its intent uncertain, you
Draw e'er closer.
Using shuttle of man,
Spaceship of man,
Armaments and nuclear fission - of man - Anything, in an attempt to understand
For knowledge propels you,

And compels you.

Under days and nights of relentless fire,
The Eye does not falter,
Grows not weary,
But delivers unto the world a message:

"Mine is this kingdom;
No power, nor glory, drives me;
I wish but to sate my hunger,
And your attack fulfils me so.
I thank you."

As the attack grows more violent,
And fission gives way to fusion,
And fusion to means unknown, Terrors wrought upon an unsuspecting Populus,
By Gravity, unfeeling.
Which were unleashed by man and,
Inadvertently, return to man.

Music fades out slowly.

The Eye does not cease, does not stop,
Only watches - observes - and eats.
A vacuous hole in the universe,
And one from which naught emerges.

Theme plays.
