

Prompt: “Miracles”

I believe in miracles. It's stupid not to.

Put it this way, your child has a five percent survival rate after being diagnosed with cancer that has already spread to their brain. Your kid has gone through chemo, radiation and multiple brain surgeries. The doctors have done everything they can to try and get the tumor out and gone but it keeps on coming back. Would you just sit there and wait for your child to die or hope that a miracle would happen and your child stays alive escaping the cancer. You, as a parent, can't do anything physically to help your child who is suffering. But you can hope. So why wouldn't you. Are you just giving up that 1 chance that your child will get better? There's no point in giving up. Giving away that one miracle that can save your child.

Miracles by definition is “a surprising and welcome event that is not explicable by natural or scientific laws and is therefore considered to be the work of a divine agency.” Going against all odds, against science, believing in the greater good. Why not believe in a miracle and want something good to happen? I get it, it's easier to give up, let it go and give all your power to the darkness. But would you rather give up your fight and live a life in darkness or keep on fighting and win that battle.

Nobody can really explain how miracles happen or how they really work. Some believe in a greater power like God or another symbol of power, some believe they're powered by us humans. In other words, most people try and do everything they can to find the reason for miracles. They want to explain them.

I believe the beauty of a miracle is that we don't know how they happen nor can we explain why they happen. “Not explicable by natural or scientific laws...,” meaning miracles can not be explained. The whole point is not knowing. So why do we want to know so badly?

I've only been on this earth for 14 years. In those 14 years I've realized that humans like control. They like knowing and having knowledge. They like having power and the ability to determine what happens next. I guess that's just the way the world works. You can believe or you can't believe. It's really just your choice.
