Abstract (The abstract about 800 words, Times New Roman 11 point bold letters left justified)

Content (Times New Roman 11 point normal letters)

Purpose: This section articulates the rationale for conducting the study. For novel research, clearly identify the problem addressed and its significance. For research building upon prior studies, briefly justify why further investigation was necessary. This section allows the author to communicate the relevance of the research topic and highlight the central argument or primary findings.

Study Design/Methodology/Approach: This section describes the methodological framework and procedures employed to obtain the results. Specify the research approach—such as qualitative interviews, laboratory experiments, surveys, or data analysis—and detail the tools, methods, protocols, or datasets utilized. Clarity in methodology ensures transparency and reproducibility of the study.

Findings: In this section, present the results of the study in a precise and objective manner. Indicate whether the findings address the research problem and confirm or refute the hypothesis. Provide specific data or evidence rather than generalized statements, avoiding overstatement or creating unrealistic expectations about the outcomes.

Originality/Value: This section emphasizes the contribution and significance of the study. Articulate the novel insights or practical implications of the findings, ensuring the evaluation is balanced and well-supported. Consider discussing potential avenues for future research, highlighting how the study advances knowledge or informs practice in the field.
