overall: Ever since he was little, Miguel has always wanted to help others, but not in the ways his family would approve of, much to their chagrin. Miguel does his best to do good, while his family would prefer his help in their criminal activity instead.

Despite trying to distance himself from his family, they always have a way of coming back around, resulting in Miguel feeling paranoid at different points that they'll bring unnecessary attention to him and get him in some type of trouble, which he can't afford. Despite his dislike of his family's activities and the lectures he often finds himself giving them, Miguel, begrudgingly helps them out, anyway. Though, he's usually ushering them out the door the moment they've finished using him for his medical prowess.

Miguel is typically very hardworking, almost to a fault, due to having a tendency to overwork himself unless someone pulls him back and forces him to take a break. It's never an intentional thing, but sometimes Miguel has a hard time letting himself pull back from something once he's focused on it, with his devotion often coming off as stubbornness.

Oftentimes, he finds himself unable to sit still, always needing to be on the go, doing something to make himself useful to those in need. Sometimes he just needs someone to pull him back and let him know that occasionally doing nothing is okay, too.

Miguel, despite being friendly and outgoing, albeit a little awkward at times, only reveals so much to people he works with and those he meets otherwise, not liking being pushed to talk about things he isn't comfortable with. He comes off as an open book until it comes to personal family inquiries, that's when he becomes more reserved and vague. He doesn't want to cause problems for his family, but he also doesn't want to scare people off or alert them of unsavory activities that his family is known for. He does his best to shield people from that part of his life— be it friends, co-workers, or even his pre-teen daughter, but he worries that he won't be able to do that forever.

He is very protective of people he grows close to and does whatever he can to keep them safe, including keeping them separate from his chaotic family. Hazel, Miguel's daughter, is the biggest source of his concern, however, and would do anything to keep her safe, including not letting her around her relatives without his supervision, as there's no telling what they would expose her to. If anything were to happen to her, he would never be able to forgive himself.

Sometimes Miguel likes to pretend that he has a normal little family and leads a normal life until other members of his family come knocking on his door at three in the morning with an injured person for him to patch up or whenever his ex-wife comes snooping back around for one thing or another. That's when his fantasy comes crashing down around him.

eating habits: Miguel typically tries to eat healthy, not being much of one to eat a lot of fast food, though he isn't opposed to it, especially on busy days and nights. He usually drinks protein shakes, coffee, and water. He does his best to cook the dishes his mom would when he was a child, but they never taste as good as hers given that she often shoosed everyone out of the kitchen while cooking. Miguel's cooking can sometimes be a hit or miss but he always tries his best.

biography.

Miguel had known from a young age that he wanted to help people, and not in the sense of only helping his family in their nefarious behaviors, much to their dismay, but actually help strangers he'd see once and never again.

The idea had been sparked in his head ever since he'd heard his mother complaining about his tio Ricky. Ricky, as Miguel's mother had put it, "married a gringo and turned his back on their family," and when Miguel had tried to push further, his mother, Malena, only supplied him with "he had ideas above his station; thought he could do things he had no business doing," before she ushered Miguel away so she could focus on other things. Miguel eventually found out that all his tio Ricky had actually done was meet this pretty white woman who just so happened to open Ricky's eyes to the fact that the world had so much more to offer than what he'd grown up around. She was a firefighter and introduced Ricky to that career as well.

Miguel had only recalled getting to see his uncle a handful of times before that stopped altogether. Eventually he sought out his uncle, unbeknownst to his parents, and had a long conversation with him about everything that had happened, finally getting to hear his uncle's side of the story and heeding his advice of, "The life of a criminal is no way to live. There's more to life than robbing and killing. The world needs more good-hearted people."

Ricky had told Miguel that he saw potential in him to be a good person, that he could achieve whatever he wanted if he believed in himself and tried hard enough and to not let the expectations and wrong-doings of his family drag him down.

That had been the first conversation Miguel had with his uncle in years, and, unfortunately, would also be his last. Ricky died about a month later after trying to save a family from a burning building and getting caught in a gas explosion before he could get out, himself. Miguel read about it in the paper, heard his family scoffing about it, and hated that he was unable to attend his uncle's funeral, but knew at that moment that he wanted to be just like his uncle.

Upon entering high school, he became a junior firefighter and after turning eighteen, became a volunteer—taking EMT classes in the meantime—until he was able to become a firefighter full-time and make a career out of it. Needless to say, his parents weren't thrilled about it, but the prospect of Miguel gaining some medical prowess gained their attention, more than willing to use it for their own personal gain.

Once Miguel was able to start making some money, he moved out of his parents' house, and into his own modest apartment in the Arts District, near Downtown, Los Angeles, enjoying that he was still relatively near the fire station he worked at.

Miguel met his now ex-wife, Vanessa, one night when out at a bar, having drinks with some of his coworkers. She was tipsy and came on strong, but since Miguel was a few drinks in, and starting to feel the effects of them, he didn't mind. One thing led to another, and they wound up going home together. It was only supposed to be a one-night stand—which Miguel had never taken part in before—but it wound up being more than either of them bargained for when Vanessa fell pregnant.

Upon being given the news, Miguel proposed, they got engaged, and had a shotgun wedding a few months later—yet another thing for Miguel's family to disapprove of. Regardless, nine months later, Vanessa gave birth to their daughter, Hazel. Miguel and Vanessa's time together before the birth of their daughter had been a little rocky, but otherwise okay. It wasn't until afterwards that Miguel realized it wasn't going to work out. Vanessa wasn't exactly what most would call 'Mother Material' and it became more and more transparent the more time went on. She didn't have a very mother-like instinct when it came to their daughter and Miguel could see how much it stressed her out.

Vanessa eventually started staying out longer, spending less time at home, and the times when she'd promise to be back in time for dinner or before Miguel had to go to work the following morning, she'd be a no show more often than Miguel cared to admit; resulting in him having to carry his infant daughter with him to work more often than he probably should have. Thankfully, no one minded.

They were only married for just under a year when eventually, Vanessa's lack of parenting skills and immaturity got to be too much, and Miguel filed for divorce. When it came to custody of their daughter, Miguel got sole custody which was fine with Vanessa because she didn't want all the responsibility, anyway. She would have times where she would come around to see her daughter, but eventually those times became less and less. The times she'd come to see her daughter varied, sometimes not showing up for a month or two before randomly showing up at Miguel's door or workplace.

Even with all the trouble of dealing with his ex-wife, and Miguel becoming a young father at twenty-three, he still had no regrets in everything that happened. He wouldn't trade having his daughter for anything in the world.

Eventually, he managed to move into a nicer house in Silver Lake, Los Angeles, still working at the same fire station, with Hazel often spending time with him and the other firefighters there when she wasn't in school. For the most part, all is well, though there are still times when Miguel's family comes snooping around for his (reluctant) help with things. Somehow, he always finds himself getting wrapped up into their mess, despite his best efforts to keep both himself and his daughter out of a life like that.

Even though Miguel greatly disagrees with his family's criminal lifestyle—the drugs, the robbing, the killing, and various other mafia-like activities—he still finds himself helping them out, partly because it's forced upon him and partly because they're his family and he feels like it's his responsibility. It doesn't stop him from lecturing them whenever they pull him into something, however.

* Miguel's family has distant ties with some of the major crime families—a cousin of a cousin type of thing, with his family helping out when needed for a price.

* Miguel had Hazel at 23, and in 2013 Hazel is 12, going on 13. Don't expect for your muse to have a close relationship with Miguel without also knowing Hazel and occasionally having to interact with her.

age: 30 (as of 2013).
gender: Cis female (she/her).
zodiac: Scorpio sun, Capricorn ascendant & moon.
orientation: Bisexual.
occupation: Hitwoman / does odd jobs, part-time bowling alley employee (while living in NYC) or hotel clerk (while living in LA).
nationality: Italian-American.
ethnicity: Caucasian.
hometown: New York City, New York.

hair colour: Dirty blonde.
eye colour: Hazel.
height: 5'7".
build: Hourglass shaped; curvaceous, toned.
scars / markings: Various small scars on her hands and torso.
tattoos: N/A.
piercings: Once on each ear.
notable features: Eyes, hair, build.

personality.

positive traits: Resourceful / Brave / Passionate / Loyal / Assertive / Determined / Responsible / Disciplined / Independent / Hardworking.

negative traits: Distrusting / Jealous / Secretive / Violent / Blunt / Unforgiving / Condescending / Grudging / Miserly / Sarcastic.

overall: Diana has always been the type to know what she wants and how to get it. Some might say that she's determined to a fault— that fault being her ever-grating stubbornness when it comes to getting something done. She has a hard time letting go of things as a result. On the upside, she knows how to get things done both for herself and others.

Despite being the type to look out for number one (herself), when Diana cares about someone she'll always make sure that they're looked after. She's very protective of those she cares about and loyal to them as long as they treat her with the same respect. She'll always have someone's back so long as the sentiment is returned.

However, even with her loyal nature, Diana can also be very secretive about things. For example, despite how much she might love and care for her family, she has plenty of things she's never told them. The same can be said for the few friends she might have in her life. She just doesn't know how much she can actually trust someone, especially when taking in consideration her paranoia from her hit job gone wrong. She hopes that one day she might find someone who she can tell anything and everything to without fear of them telling someone else or breaking things off with her and running off somewhere. Her biggest fear is to have her trust broken.

Diana doesn't have very many people in her circle, however, due to her lack of social skills. She also used to have terrible anger issues as a kid so she grew up feeling rather isolated from everyone else. She didn't make many friends during high school, after being medicated for her IED and attending classes for anger management either. Any friends that she did make either moved away or fell out of touch with her after graduation. Even though, realistically, she knows that friendships made in high school rarely last, she still blames herself for their failures. She assumes the friends probably made no attempts to reach out to her because of her attitude.

Diana can be too blunt and tactless about things, having terrible bedside manner, as well as sometimes talking down on people without even realizing it. Her sarcastic nature can make it seem like she doesn't take something seriously, and her pessimistic outlook on life can make her not too fun to be around— though she insists on calling herself a 'realist.' She also has a tendency to shoot herself in the foot when it comes to taking a while to come around to forgiving someone, as well as holding grudges.

None of her romantic relationships have ever worked out due to many of the same issues she has with friendships. Her distrusting and paranoid behavior contributes to a sense of jealousy where she assumes that her partner would really be happier with anyone else. Also, her inability to really open up to anyone puts a damper on any long-lasting, potential relationships. She won't ever admit it, but she has a tendency to self-sabotage good things for herself (this can go for romantic or platonic relationships, or even just menial things in her day-to-day life).

Overall, Diana can either be a person's best friend or a terrible enemy. Even with her tough exterior, on the inside she is much softer than she lets on. A person just needs to be patient and trustworthy enough with her for her to finally feel comfortable enough to let her guard down.

eating habits: It's rare that Diana will actually sit down and eat a full meal. The only time that usually happens is during holidays. She typically snacks lightly throughout the day in lieu of proper meals. She'll swear it's because she doesn't have the time to actually cook most days.

exercise habits: Diana usually goes for morning jogs at 5am daily, and attends kickboxing classes three times a week.

biography.

Diana was born and raised in New York City to two second generation Italians. Growing up, on one hand, while her grandparents were still alive, she got to hear stories about what their journey to America was like and on the other, she witnessed more than her fair share of people getting their kneecaps broken. Her childhood was a mixed bag.

Apparently, sometime after arriving in America, Diana's grandfather had fallen in with the mafia in order to make a living. In turn, it was the life her father had been raised up into, and thus, so had she. The dangerous life of a mobster resulted in her family moving around a lot, from safehouse to safehouse. It didn't take long for Diana to decide that type of life just wasn't for her.

She moved out of her parents' house right after turning eighteen, and into her own apartment in Brooklyn. Originally, it was an attempt to get away from the dangers of her father's profession, but it didn't take long for Diana to be pulled right back into that world.

Given that Brooklyn is a less expensive place to live than her family's home in Queens, Diana figured that getting a job down at the nearby bowling alley, along with working a few odd jobs here and there would be enough to support herself. Unfortunately, this didn't turn out to be the case. Rent and other living expenses turned out to be higher than she had expected, and due to this, Diana had to hone the skills she'd learned from her father.

Eventually, she was able to get her name out there, letting people know that she was a hitwoman for hire. If the pay was good enough, she would take on the job. Sometimes, if she was desperate enough for the money, she'd take just about anything offered to her.

She knew that she could go to her parents for money if she needed anything, but, being the proud woman she was, Diana couldn't bring herself to swallow her pride to do so. This is ultimately what came back around to bite her in the ass some years down the road.

She managed to do well enough, living in her little apartment in Brooklyn, until just before her twenty-fifth birthday. She got contacted by a man to take out his asshole boss. It had seemed easy enough, but she hadn't been counting on someone else being in the building at the time of the kill. If it had just been her and the bossman, the plan would've gone off without a hitch. Unfortunately, an employee who was working late that night spooked her, and her shot, despite hitting the target, wasn't lethal. Without any time to do anything else, she fled, narrowly escaping before the employee could get a good look at her. This is the event that resulted in Diana packing up all of her belongings and fleeing to Los Angeles to start over and to hopefully keep from getting caught.

Fast forward five years and Diana has a newer, better life for herself. She'd taken up a job as a hotel clerk, going back to also doing odd jobs for some extra cash to help better afford her apartment in Santa Monica.

Times still have a tendency to get tough, however, and because of this, Diana has gone back to doing hits on people for the right price. This time, however, she swears she won't make the same mistake again.

additional information.

* When Diana was fourteen, she was diagnosed with IED (Intermittent Explosive Disorder). She has always been hotheaded, but it would seem that she would feel anger without being provoked. Any intense emotions she felt could easily morph into IED, and the results were usually different parts of the house getting damaged. It's rarer for Diana to attack a person due to her disorder, but it has been known to happen on occasion— usually if the person has it coming. She takes medication for it, however, and that helps a lot, though she still has her slip-ups every so often.

* When Diana turned twenty-three, she rescued a German Shepherd puppy. She named him Chief and he became her companion, making her feel less lonely. Most times he will be found accompanying her for walks. He is very protective, but if a person doesn't seem like a threat, he can be very friendly. He is currently seven years old as of 2013.

* Diana suffers from paranoia at times as a result of her job gone wrong back in New York City. She will typically keep her guard up and be suspicious of others for a while until she gets to know them. The paranoia is also what contributes to her insomnia and when she does manage to fall asleep, can cause nightmares of that time.

personality.

positive traits: Adventurous / Confident / Clever / Strong-willed / Curious / Forthright / Hard working / Warm / Passionate / Generous.
overall: Joyce is highly generous, amicable and a tremendously benevolent mother who would do almost anything to keep her sons out of harm's way, sometimes to the point of coming off as overbearing and smothering. Though her over-worrying behavior is what helps contribute to her protectiveness of her sons, with the protective, worry wart behavior only intensifying after the discovery of the upside down.

Steadfast and determined, Joyce will stop at nothing to get the job done once she's made her mind up about something. She may push too far and overstep some boundaries, though it rarely comes from a place of malice. She is ambitious to a fault and hates to rely on others to help her, despite being the first in line to have the back of someone she cares about. She'd gotten used to doing things on her own over the years, but especially after the rumors of her being frazzled and neurotic started to surface. Though, eventually, some years later, she's come to allow herself to rely on others more and finds that she's better for it.

Joyce is a rather intelligent, clever woman, having pieced together most of the mishappenings in Hawkins before anyone else. Whenever things start to go awry, Joyce notices and makes it her mission to figure it out, having been referred to by Jim as "Detective Byers" as a result.

Despite her overall kind and giving nature, Joyce can be quick to anger, especially if someone puts up resistance to her or gives her a hard time. Though, on the other hand, she is also willing to sit and listen and give advice whenever someone might need it. She is the type to fight tooth and nail for the things she wants and for those she cares about. She's very brave when she needs to be, and won't let anything get her way.

all. Sometimes she simply cannot turn her brain off and will toss and turn all night until she has to get up in the morning for work.

eating habits: Though Joyce is always looking out for her kids and making sure they eat, she's not so great at remembering to do so, herself. Sometimes, if particularly stressed out, she won't have much of an appetite and will have to be reminded to eat something because it slipped her mind.

notable features: Hair style, build, glasses, freckles sprinkled over her entire body.

positive traits: Reliable / Caring / Endearing / Intelligent / Loyal / Nice / Supportive / Hard working / Sensible / Compassionate.

negative traits: Shy / Anxious / Sarcastic / Modest / Judgy / Sassy / Nitpicky / Over-worrier / Awkward / Distant.

overall: Barb is a very kind, cautious, sensible and smart girl, as well as very quiet, brave and good spirited. She is the type to try to blend into the crowd, rather than stand out, not liking a whole lot of attention, due to the amount of bullying she's endured throughout her life. When Nancy garners the attention of Steve Harrington, Barb is happy for her, but riddled with nervousness, both because they're getting pulled into the same popular crowd of people who bully her and also due to being terrified that Nancy will wind up ditching her for them. Barb fears isolation and doesn't want to be alone.

Due to the bullying, Barb is prone to making snap judgments about people, though she tries not to. She can be very forthright about her opinions and sometimes too blunt when telling people what she thinks and how she feels. She likes to think of herself as Nancy's voice of reason, calling her friend out whenever she does something that Barb doesn't approve of.

After getting trapped in the upside down, when she is finally rescued, and left to attempt to resume her everyday life, Barb is a shell of who she used to be. She's much more reserved and isolates herself from others while she deals with the damage her PTSD has inflicted upon her.

She is much quicker to anger, snapping on people when she might not mean to, and finds herself being more resentful of others and how they get to live their lives normally while she is one of the lucky ones with scars that will forever haunt her.

Over time, she learns how to cope and deal with her PTSD more, but she's never quite able to return to the person she once was.

overall: Raised in Hawkins National Laboratory and completely deprived of socialization, El was timid, socially withdrawn and extremely cautious of other people. However, she became fiercely protective and showed unyielding loyalty towards those who cared for her. She is very determined and will stop at nothing to keep and her friends safe from harm.

Despite her life being clouded with people manipulating and bullying her, El is shown to be incredibly empathetic, sweet, and curious about the world. Her sheltered life has left her incredibly emotional, becoming distraught easily in a dangerous or somber setting. As she grows older, El never loses her compassion, but begins to be careful on who to extend that compassion to. El's friends and family are her utmost priority, willing to do anything and everything for them even if it threatens her life.

Regardless of the love and caring from her friends and family, El is still insecure of herself and gets easily hurt by others as she typically wears her heart on her sleeve, on top of not always understanding social cues. She has a hard time understanding why people behave like they do; not sure why they lash out at her when she's done nothing wrong and is only trying to exist and fit in.

overall: Max has never felt like she fits in with the other girls her age. She never really felt an attachment towards fake nails, spray tans, or perms. Most of her time was spent in skate parks, and she never really had many female friends to hang out with. Most of the guys didn't like to hang out with her either because she's a girl, so she grew up rather lonely. Her only friend was her dad for a long time until she was forced to move away from him and with her mother and new stepdad and stepbrother to Hawkins.

Being in a new place, and her treatment in her new home, she was initially anti-social and cautious towards other people and frequently proved to be highly acerbic and overall aloof. Her distrust made her skeptical, and she had a hard time believing the strange events that occurred in her new town. Nevertheless, she was willing to lend a helping hand once she accepted the gravity of the situation. While she initially brushed off Lucas and Dustin's attempts at befriending her, she was shown to be eager to become a member of the Party, continuously enduring their harsh treatment in order to be included. When she was eventually accepted into the Party, she was immensely loyal toward her new friends, self-identifying as a "zoomer" as her role in the group and going so far as standing up to Billy in order to protect them.

A year after moving to Hawkins and meeting her new friends, Max appeared to be more social and trusting of her friends. When El came to her for relationship advice, Max gladly talked her through what she should do, using her past break-ups with Lucas as a reference. Though they hadn't gotten off on the right foot, they became fast friends and for one of the first times in Max's life, she felt happy and like she actually belonged.

Though she distanced herself from her friends, after the death of Billy, refusing to participate in activities with them and avoiding discussing her feelings with them and her school counselor. The loss of Billy took a toll on her mental health, making her more withdrawn and closed off, despite all the attempts her friends made to get her to open up to them.

overall: Max is a shy young woman, preferring to observe people from a distance or through the lens of her camera, as opposed to interacting with them face to face. As a result, she keeps largely to herself and has very few friends outside of Warren and Kate at Blackwell Academy. When she reunites with Chloe, she initially isn't sure they could be considered friends, due to the long absence of contact. Despite this, over the course of the game, Max is able to rekindle her friendship with Chloe and both come to mutually consider each other their best friend.

Despite her somewhat timid nature, Max will stand up for herself or others when pushed, though drastic actions have her frequently wonder if she made the right choice. Within the Academy, Max holds a general respect for the people she either observes or decides to interact with, with the exception of Vortex Club members, whom she instinctively dislikes. However, in certain cases, she will correct this instinctive response, as with Dana and Hayden, who treat Max amiably.

While a tad nosy by nature, Max's sleuthing becomes more frequent after she discovers her ability to rewind time, allowing her to dodge potential repercussions of her actions. However, Max does occasionally chastise herself for snooping around in other people's possessions, claiming it's "fascinating, but terribly wrong".

personality.

positive traits: Courageous / Determined / Confident / Honest / Passionate / Ambitious / Brave / Impulsive / Strong / Resilient.

negative traits: Rigid / Pessimistic / Volatile / Foolhardy / Impatient / Aggressive / Bossy / Revengeful / Hotheaded / Vindictive.

overall: Sadie was happily married to her husband, Jake Adler, and expresses that she was content in the life they lived together. His death made her deeply vengeful, vindictive, and consumed by desire for revenge against the O'Driscolls. Sadie also repeatedly demonstrates cruelty, a lack of care for her allies and recklessness which rivals that of Micah's - she is not above putting herself and her friends in unnecessary danger, which is exemplified in the battle against the O'Driscolls in Shady Belle where she does not cooperate with the rest of the gang, forcing Arthur to leave the house and risk getting killed, and murdering the O'Driscoll hostages at Colm's execution, starting a firefight. Her actions also indirectly led to Arturo Bullard's death - something Arthur had blamed her for. Sadie's personal interests could explain her own extreme aggressiveness and brutality, thus she saw her crusade against the O'Driscolls as more than simply ending a gang feud or hostility between the two gang leaders.

Despite this, Sadie is also very loyal to those she cares about. She is extremely eager to prove to Arthur and Dutch that she can be a fighting member. This is evident when she zealously asks Arthur if they should rob the general store in Rhodes, asks Dutch if he can take her robbing, and leads the counterattack against the O'Driscolls at Shady Belle. She later helps to unite and relocate the gang, fend off the Pinkertons in Lakay, rescue John from prison and keep the gang together while some of the main members are in Guarma. While initially being fairly shy, Sadie would eventually become more confident, defying Dutch's orders not to rescue John and not being afraid to challenge other members of the gang.

She also has a softer side for Arthur and holds him in high regard, even admitting that he's the only one in the gang who she truly trusts and is the best man she has known, second only to her husband. Her concern for Arthur is also exemplified when she insists on taking up physically demanding tasks by herself, including rowing a boat from Sisika Penitentiary and running-and-gunning to rescue Abigail, preventing Arthur from doing the same despite his protests. At Beaver Hollow, she also reminds Arthur to take care of himself in camp conversations. Notably, as a widow, Sadie willingly promises Arthur that she will help John, Abigail and Jack to start a family life - one that she has lost since her husband's death.

By 1907, some of Sadie's vengeful hatred and recklessness subsided. She appears much calmer when speaking to John, with whom she has maintained a good relationship; she even offers some bounty hunting jobs to help him pay back his mortgage for Beecher's Hope. However, Sadie still retains a streak of brutality and a no-nonsense attitude while dealing with criminals, and she unbendingly desired vengeance against Micah - to the point where she was prepared to put her life on the line for revenge. During a job, Sadie confesses to John that she had developed a slight death wish over time.

negative traits: Overworrier / Overly Sensitive / Escapist / Secretive / Vague / Manipulative / Trickster / Sneaky / Self-deprecating / Insecure.
overall: Mary-Beth presents herself as a kind and good-natured woman, and while this is certainly true she is also a competent thief and scam artist. Within the gang she is genuinely loving and considers most of them family. Mary-Beth is a devout bookworm, almost always seen reading a romance novel at camp, and even becomes a writer herself in the epilogue, albeit a very self-deprecating one. She's insecure about her passion and always gets shy and bashful whenever someone asks about it, calling her own books "silly".

Mary-Beth is considered the kindest and most gentle member of the Van der Linde gang. This is seen during many moments throughout the story, such as when Mary-Beth would often offer to speak with Arthur about recent events and offer him comfort on his inevitable death by his illness. Her kindness also extends towards strangers and possibly threatening figures, as seen during random events in the camp, Mary-Beth gives Kieran a cup of water while the latter remains tied up in a post after witnessing Karen taunting and mocking him. She and Kieran eventually become very close, and Mary-Beth is devastated over his death.

Mary-Beth Gaskill was born on March 2, 1877 to a single mother, just outside of Van Horn in New Hanover. They just barely scraped by, with her mother being illiterate and struggling to support them both. By the time Mary-Beth was six, her mother contracted Typhoid Fever and died from it about a month later. Afterwards, Mary-Beth was whisked off to an orphanage. By the time she was seven, she'd ran away from the orphanage to fend for herself until her teenage years.

At thirteen, after stealing watches and wallets from several men, she was chased by them until being rescued by the van der Linde Gang. Seeing merit in her pickpocketing abilities, they decided to take her under their wing, teaching her how to read, write, and help continue to mold her into the perfect criminal.

By 1907, she is an accomplished romance novelist, under the pen name of Leslie Dupont, finally getting to join those of high society. During this time, she and Tilly remain in contact and see each other often, being the only ties to the old gang either of them have.

biography.

An orphan who grew up scraping out a living in dive bars and brothels in the West, Abigail is a strong, straight-talking woman who has seen a lot of life and knows what it takes to survive against the odds. Abigail was introduced to the group by Uncle around 1894, instantly finding an attraction to John, and falling pregnant with his son some time shortly after. Her young son, Jack, is her great pride and purpose. She is determined to give him a better and more loving childhood than she ever had, even if it is an unconventional one.

Though, giving her son the life he deserves proves to be more difficult than she would like, given the state of their relationships with John, and how he left them both for a year after Jack had turned a year old, refusing to claim Jack as his own. Due to this, upon John's return, his relationship with Abigail is quite sour, and the two fight often.

Despite it all, Abigail loves John deeply and yearns for a better relationship between him, herself, and their son. She eventually gets her wish, with things starting to turn around for them upon John, Arthur, and Dutch saving Jack from Angelo Bronte and bringing him back to her.

Eventually, after many hardships, the family settle down just outside of Blackwater, deciding to try to make a go of things as ranchers at Beecher's Hope.

negative traits: Grudging / Stubborn / Violent / Hotheaded / Selfish / Impatient / Manipulative / Revengeful / Secretive / Impulsive.
overall: After the death of his beloved daughter Sarah, Joel's personality became more broody, damaged, apathetic and ruthless. These dark traits led others to describe him as a "violent thug, a brutal killer, and a torturer." He was shown to be able to kill his enemies with noteworthy brutality, earning him an infamous reputation to those he encountered. Joel rarely showed signs of happiness and was often cynical.

Over the course of their journey, Joel became extremely dedicated to Ellie, using any means possible to save her and keep her safe.

After spending years in Jackson with Ellie, Joel's humanity was restored, with him even having a more optimistic and carefree attitude than ever before. This was visible when Joel took Ellie to a Wyoming museum for her birthday and displayed his sense of humor and kindness. Despite this, he still felt guilty for lying to Ellie. Moreover, his new sense of compassion would later prove to be his fatal flaw, as it caused him to let his guard down in the presence of strangers, allowing Abby Anderson and her group to capture and torture him.

negative traits: Annoying / Lazy / Non-committal / Procrastinating / Insecure / Selfish / Smart-mouthed / Tactless / Escapist / Impulsive.

overall: Louis is very friendly and outgoing, never hesitating in being the first one to introduce himself and strike up a conversation. He enjoys making new friends and joking around (even if his jokes are sometimes in poor taste or poorly timed) and he's been known to talk too much. He's the kind of guy who'll make someone talk to him, and loves being the one to pull someone out of their shell.

He can make someone laugh, brighten someone's day, he's caring and lovable, and he has a good heart. He could so sweep someone off their feet with his charismatic personality, piano skills, and singing voice. He's a true friend and will always be there when you need him the most.

He can be really annoying, too laid-back, non-committal, and a bit selfish in his actions. He doesn't take things as seriously as some people might want him to, and his smart mouth could definitely get him into a lot of trouble. He can also be quite lazy and procrastinating.

sleeping habits: Louis is a heavy sleeper, but lucky for him, he's been able to sleep in the safety of the boarding school. He tosses and turns a lot during the night and he drools and snores sometimes so he's not exactly the ideal person to sleep next to. If he can, he'll sleep in til noon and hates having to get up early.
eating habits: Louis is a picky eater. He can't really afford to be picky nowadays, but there are still plenty of foods that he does not like. If not for the apocalypse limiting their food supply, Louis would probably be the type to pig out on junk food often.
exercise habits: Louis doesn't exercise as much as he probably should, but he is plenty active throughout his day to make up for it.
addictions: N/A.

biography.

- Louis was born into a very wealthy family, and got everything he wanted...for the most part.
- He went to a private school, was given piano lessons, taught foreign languages, the whole nine yards. As a result, he'd quickly become a spoiled brat.
- Louis is a very intelligent guy, despite how he might come off to others.
- But he's also a huge class clown who's incredibly lazy, so naturally, the teachers didn't like that.
- He was that student who would sleep in the middle of a lesson only to have the teacher call on him in an attempt to embarrass him in front of everyone, and then he'd get the answers the teacher asked correct, embarrassing the teacher instead.

- He's a smart ass and undoubtedly gotten into many arguments with his teachers about various things.
- Louis would be way ahead of whatever lessons the class would be learning that day.
- Louis also probably skipped class a lot and probably hung out with students that he shouldn't have.
- Despite his attitude towards school and some of the undesirable kids he liked to spend his time with, the thing that finally got him sent to Ericson's was breaking up his parents' marriage.
- Louis wanted singing lessons and begged his father for them often, but it seemed to be the one thing that his father would never give him. As a result, he used his father's credit card to buy things for a made up 'mistress', as well as other incriminating things that he knew his mother would be livid over.
- Once the divorce was final, he came clean about it all, telling them that it was him who'd ruined their marriage, and that was the final straw for the both of them. Louis regrets ever doing such a thing now.
- It was at Ericson that he met Marlon and the two became fast friends.
- Marlon had bad anger issues, which is why he was sent there in the first place, but Louis was able to bring out his fun side and help him work through his frustrations.
- When the world went to shit, Louis greatly stepped back and let Marlon take the reins because Louis didn't want to be held responsible for the lives of a bunch of kids.
- He was more than happy to play the role of 'sidekick', however.

- he gets his left nostril pierced, and both ears (once on each side)
- he gets a tattoo on his left forearm of spiraling musical notes, starting from the inside of his elbow, wrapping around his arm, down to his wrist
- whoever he ends up with, he'd want at least three kids with them, so that way they can be a big, happy family, and no one will end up feeling unloved and lonely like he did as a kid negative traits: Worrier / Reserved / Overcritical / Hotheaded / Perfectionist / Impatient / Moody / Overemotional / Bossy / Sassy.

She still believes in using manners even in the apocalypse, something that was drilled into her from a young age that she's never been able to break— not that she wants to, anyway. She is also rather emotional and sympathetic, also being able to empathize with others easily.

Ruby can be a little rough around the edges, especially if her first impression of someone is rather low, but underneath the tough exterior, she's genuinely very sweet and caring. Upon first meeting someone, Ruby will try to give them the benefit of the doubt more often than not, only treating them poorly if that's how they treated her. Though she's more than willing to become friends if someone shows interest.

mental ailments: GAD (Generalized Anxiety Disorder), prone to panic attacks, insomnia, ODD (Oppositional Defiant Disorder).

sleeping habits: Ruby is a heavy sleeper, but lucky for her, she's been able to sleep in the safety of the boarding school. She's always suffered a bit from insomnia, however, but some nights are better or worse than others. She's always been an early riser, as well.

eating habits: Ruby has never been a picky eater. She's always eaten whatever was made for her (with very few exceptions), she also insists on maintaining table manners, even now. She enjoys hunting game, and using herbs and spices to add flavor to whatever it is that her group cooks.

exercise habits: Admittedly, Ruby doesn't exercise as much as she probably should, but she is plenty active throughout her day.

addictions: N/A.

drug use: N/A.

biography.

- from a young age, despite being raised properly and well-mannered, ruby had disruptive tendencies.
- she would say that it started becoming more and more frequent when she started being bullied in school.
- she's always been one of the bigger kids in her classes, along with having rosacea, so she was a key target.
- finally, one day she'd had enough and attacked one of the kids picking on her, much to her parent's dismay.
- when she was six, she was diagnosed with oppositional defiant disorder (odd) and her parents worked to help her treat it.
- with the proper exercises and medications, things were starting to look better for her, despite some incidents here and there, but it was unfortunately short-lived.
- her parents were slowly starting to reach their wits end with her, and the last straw was the day she got jealous of her younger sister and attacked her, much like she did the kid who had bullied her.
- shortly thereafter, ruby got sent up to ericson's boarding school for troubled youths and rarely/never saw her parents or sister again.
- tl;dr: ruby was bullied for her appearance, got into fights, was diagnosed with odd, attacked her sibling out of jealousy, was an embarrassment to her parents, and got sent up to ericson's.

overall: Carlos, while stern and strict, is a good man. He doesn't trust others easily, and can be rather skeptical over some things. With Sarah, he is overly protective of her, and shelters her too much, but he feels that it is necessary to keep her safe. It's not wise to try to tell him how he should and shouldn't raise Sarah. Telling him that he does nothing but "baby" her, and that he "needs to let her grow up some time" will only result in him getting frustrated with you. Generally, Carlos tries to keep a cool head, but he can be quick to anger if an issue is pressed far enough. He tries to do what's best for the group, whether it pleases or displeases the others.

name: Katrina Elaine Garcia (nee Lovett).

age: Twenty-one (s1), twenty-three (s2), twenty-five (s3), twenty-eight (s4).
gender: Cis female (she/hers).
zodiac: Aquarius sun, Sagittarius ascendant & Gemini moon.
orientation: Bisexual.
occupation: Housewife (pre-apocalypse), survivor.
nationality: American.
ethnicity: Caucasian.
hometown: Adrian, Michigan.
residence: Baltimore, Maryland (pre-apocalypse) ; Richmond, Virginia ; verse dependent.

faceclaim: Jocelin Donahue (main), Sasha Sloan (alt), Mackenzie Foy (kid/teen).
hair colour: Chestnut brown.
eye colour: Hazel-green.
height: 5'7".
build: Tall, thin, probably malnourished, toned stomach, long limbs, subtle hourglass shape.
scars / markings: On her abdomen from getting shot.
tattoos: N/A.

notable features: Full lips, captivating eyes, freckles, braided hair, smooth, olive skin.

positive traits: Progressive / Original / Humanitarian / Friendly / Laid-back / Humorous / Honest / Loyal / Loving / Intelligent.
negative traits: Temperamental / Stubborn / Sarcastic / Tactless / Childish / Hotheaded / Overworrier / Insecure / Escapist / Nervous.
overall: Kate's relatively laid-back and known to joke around and allow her words to drip with sarcasm when the occasion calls for it. She's inexperienced where being a mother is concerned, however, and between struggling to keep her stepchildren safe and being worried over getting caught up with walkers, she's known as the "mean stepmom" much to her dismay. Despite this, she really, truly does care for her children, but finds it hard to relate to them and to get along. She can be a bit tactless with some of the things she says, and can even be a bit forward at times, but she means well.

Kate's a very friendly person, and the only time she's not is when someone gives her a reason. She considers herself to be an ambivert, seeing as how she adopts traits from both introverts and extraverts. At times she might like to be alone and recharge, whereas other times she might like to be around people all day as opposed to being alone. She also usually tries to help fellow survivors out if she can, but will always be cautious at first, even more so if they come off as suspicious to her.

weather: Cool, snowy days and nights with clear skies.
color: Green, red, blue, and neutrals.
music: Indie rock/folk, alternative, 80s and 90s.
movies: Horror.
sports: Skateboarding.
beverage: Coffee, soda, tea (hot or cold), bottled water.
food: Spicy chili, Mexican cuisine, big pretzels, chocolate ice cream.

mother: Lorraine Lovett (assumed deceased); Luciana Garcia (mother-in-law, deceased).
father: Emerson Lovett (assumed deceased); Salvador "Rafa(el)" Garcia (father-in-law, deceased).
sibling(s): Javier Garcia (brother-in-law).
significant other(s): David Garcia ((ex-)husband, deceased ; verse dependent), Javier Garcia (boyfriend ; determinant), verse dependent.
children: Gabriel Garcia (stepson, alive ; verse dependent), Mariana Garcia (stepdaughter, deceased ; verse dependent).
pets: Grey the Second (grey chinchilla ; modern verse).
other relationships: Elisabetta Petrakis (maternal grandmother, deceased), Katherine Lovett (paternal aunt, deceased).

physical ailments: Right ankle - weak from breaking it when she was fifteen due a skateboarding incident, and then proceeding to try to walk on it before it was properly healed. (she suffers from chronic pain from it now and still wears an ankle brace); Recovering from a gunshot wound to the abdomen (verse dependent).

mental ailments: GAD (Generalized Anxiety Disorder), prone to panic attacks, insomnia.

sleeping habits: Kate's a light sleeper and had been even before the apocalypse. She's always suffered from insomnia, but the apocalypse has made it worse. Whenever she does sleep, it's not in the most comfortable conditions (i.e. sleeping in the front seat of their van) and she doesn't get much sleep, usually waking up various times throughout the night.

eating habits: Despite her attempts to eat healthy, Kate had been known to consume more than her fair share of junk food. She would at least try to eat in moderation. She does get the munchies, however, so it's a miracle that she was able to keep as nice a figure as she did. These days, she'll pretty much eat whatever.

exercise habits: Kate would usually try to get some exercise three times a week. She used to exercise more often than that in her younger and/or college years, and even after marrying David, but becoming a housewife and having so much work to do made exercising very often rather difficult at times.

addictions: N/A.

drug use: She smokes marijuana, though she mostly uses it to help with her anxiety, insomnia, and chronic pain.

alcohol use: Social drinker; occasional.

biography.

- she was born into a lower-middle class family and was born as katrina elaine lovet.
- she's not a big fan of her name so she goes by kate.
- her parents don't like it and will call her katrina regardless of her protests.
- kate and her parents don't get along very well at all, and eventually they basically ended up disowning her.
- she was a bit...different growing up. her parents wanted her to be one way, but she turned out another.
- the plan was for her to grow up to be a proper young woman, to fit into the social norm, but kate didn't want that.
- her mother was a stay at home mom, so kate tried to avoid being at home as much as possible, and she didn't see much of her father since he was always working.
- as a teenager, kate had some questionable friends, who weren't exactly the best influences on her. her parents didn't like this and since they didn't, kate continued to hang out with them.

- she ended up hanging around the troublemakers and the stoners, and because of this, there were a few illegal things she did and some that she got caught for.
- she didn't really smoke much prior to the outbreak, but was more of a "casual smoker" who would do so if her friends were.
- despite it all, kate was typically your 'b' student, and that wasn't good enough for her parents, apparently.
- kate got arrested for "shoplifting" at one point (which wasn't really her fault as one of her "friends" at the time snuck it into her bag unbeknownst to her) and that was the last straw for her parents.
- at the age of sixteen, kate was kicked out of her parents' house, and was taken in by her maternal grandmother. she ended up passing away around the time kate was nineteen, leaving kate on her own.
- she managed to stay afloat, just barely, and if not for david, she's not sure what she would've done.
- she met david sometime while she was eighteen, and ended up moving in with him after her grandmother passed away. not long afterwards, he proposed to her.
- kate was iffy about marrying him, as she was so young, and he already had kids of his own. she didn't consider herself "stepmom material" and reminded david of this, but it didn't deter him from wanting to marry her.
- for a while, kate considered david her savior as he helped her when she was at her lowest point, and she was sure that she loved him, but as the years went on and the way he acted towards her started to change, so did her feelings.
- kate only managed to get an associates degree before becoming a full-time housewife.
- she didn't have an exact plan for what she wanted to do with her life, but she knew that she wanted to base her career around the arts. (probably something to do with dancing since it was something she enjoyed.)
- barely two years into the marriage and she was already unhappy and wanting to leave him, but either too unsure or too scared or both to do so.
- she'd also grown considerably attached to gabe and mariana during this time and also didn't want to leave them.
- during this time, she eventually met javier, and with how strained the relationship between her and david was, it was easier to grow closer to javi.
- she'd only ever seen little glimpses of him here and there for a while after she married david, but once he started being around a little bit more here and there, she decided that she liked having him around. he was her friend, and soon enough she came to the realization that she'd formed some type of feelings for him.

- she enjoyed javi's company, and liked the fact that he wasn't so serious all the time like david. it was one of the things that contributed to her little "crush", but she was only ever subtle about it, as she didn't want to deal with the shit storm that would form if anything ever happened between the two of them.
- once the apocalypse hit, she ended up being separated from david, and eventually started wearing her wedding ring on her right hand. she held onto it because of the sentimental value it held, but she no longer considered herself married to david.
- with david not around to breath down her neck about things, she took to smoking weed again, much more frequently than she did post-apocalypse. she usually smokes it because it helps to alleviate any stress and it mellows her out. she also likes the high that it gives her.
- she's also a bit more open with her flirtation towards javi, while also trying not to put any pressure on him. she also knows how weird it would probably be, not only for javi and herself, but for the kids as well.

- if someone asked her if she could go back to her normal life before the outbreak, she'd tell them no, for obvious reasons, but she wouldn't be against things slowly returning to normal, however.
