The current MLS Cup odds favor the Union at +350, followed by Seattle at +450 and LAFC at +500.

Philly Eyeing MLS Cup

The Union was seen as a side who could be at the top of the East prior to this season after bringing in several players to bolster their squad. They've fully lived up to expectations through all competitions this year so far, making a tremendous run to the semis in the MLS is Back Tournament and now, they've captured the Supporters Shield.

Strike duo Kacper Przybylko and Sergio Santos have led the way up top for Jim Curtin's men, both netting eight times this season. Midfielder Anthony Fontana also bagged six goals as Philly went on to score 44 goals in 23 matches this season while conceding just 20 times. Heading into the playoffs, the Union have lost just twice in their last ten appearances. Although it's still unknown as to who their opponent will be in the first round, this team will be ready to go as they start their road to capturing the MLS Cup.

Can Seattle Do It Again?

The Sounders have won the Cup twice in the last five years and will be looking to repeat as champions after beating Toronto FC in the finals last season. They exited in the Round of 16 in the MLS is Back Tournament to their exact opponent in the first round of the playoffs later this month: LAFC. Seattle will be ultimately looking for revenge, but it will not be an easy match by any means. They will be playing on home soil, however, at CenturyLink Field.

Just like Philly, Brian Schmetzer's squad had a clinical attack this season with Raul Ruidiaz and Jordan Morris scoring 12 and 10 goals, respectively. Nicolas Lodeiro was the heartbeat of their midfield as well, bagging seven goals and also assisting another six. After a strong year, the Sounders will certainly be heading into the playoffs with confidence but their first round opponent shouldn't be taken for granted.

2020 Serie A Odds Tracker Read More Teams to Watch

Sporting KC is a side who's seen their odds go from +1800 to +800 after winning the Western Conference. They enter the postseason in solid form, winning their last three fixtures while allowing no goals in the process. Striker Johnny Russell enjoyed a quick start to the campaign with six goals, but he hasn't scored in his last eight appearances. Sporting will take on a gritty San Jose squad in the first round.

LAFC may have finished in seventh place, but they're always a team to keep an eye on due to their lethal attack. Uruguayan Diego Rossi won the scoring title with 14 goals to his name as they went on to score an MLS-best 47 goals. Bradley Wright-Phillips is always capable of finding the back of the net as well. Although Bob Bradley's side beat Seattle in the MLS is Back, they were knocked out by them in the Western Conference Finals in 2019. This will definitely be a match where an upset is possible.

Orlando City SC fed off the advantage of playing at home in the MLS is Back, advancing all the way to the final only to lose to Portland. They've continued their momentum into the season, finishing in fourth spot in the East. Their odds have shortened to +600 in regards to the MLS Cup after being at +800 a month ago.

NYCFC bagged nine goals in their last two games and enter the postseason in immaculate form. Expect to see a first round thriller between them and Orlando which could go either way.
Best Bet

It's hard to look past Philadelphia's consistent form over the last number of months. They were good in the tune-up tournament in Orlando and also in the season. There weren't many slip-ups by this side and Philly have proven they can beat the best clubs around. Seattle and Portland are both teams who could do some damage from the West, but I believe the Union are the current best bet to win the MLS Cup.

Pick: Philadelphia Union (+350)
