A pilot cannot fly by sight alone. In many conditions, such as flying at night and landing in dense fog, a pilot must use radar, an alternative way of navigating(su du lich bang duong hang khong). Since human eyes are not very good at determining speechs of approaching objects, radar can show a pilot how fast nearbly planes are moving. The basic principle of radar is exemplified by what happens when one shouts in a cave. The echo(tieng vang) of the sounds against the walls helps a person determine the size of the cave. With radar, however, the waves are radio waves instead of sound waves. Radio waves travel at the speed of light, about 300,000 kilometres in one second. A radar set sends out a short burst of radio waves. Then it receives the echoes proceduced when the waves bounce off(tro lai) objects. By determining the time it takes for the echoes to return to the radar set, a trained technician can determine the distance between the radar set and other objects. The word "radar", in fact, gets its name from the term "radio detection and ranging(dinh vi vung)". "Ranging" is the term for detection of the distance
