The passage argues that forming a team for a new projects can bring several benefits. Meanwhile, the speaker mentioned a number of drawbacks of organizing a team that should not be neglected. Firstly, the passage argues that team members means more creative and quicker response because members have a variety of expertise and skills. However, the speaker mentioned that there may also be free riders who do not contribute but share the recognitions. Besides, the team can also be slow because reaching a consensus may be time-consuming. Secondly, it is asserted by the article that a team can spread responsibility, making it more will to make risky decisions. To the speakers opion, however, the decisions are not always the result of consensus, but of some influencers in the team. Therefore, spreading the responsibility in this case becomes unfair to other members. Thirdly, forming a team allows individuals who take part in it achieve higher, and more influential goal, enables them to attain greater recongnition that one cannot obtain alone. On the other hand, the speaker accounted that forming a team also makes the blame goes to everyone. Also, the recongnition goes to the whole group, decrease the values of prominent performance of some members.

Always telling the truth is the most important consideration in any relationship between people.

Is telling the truth the supreme concern in any relationship between people, as the statement claimed? To some extent, I agree with the writer's contention because telling the truth is often an act of friendly, which helps to reinforce relationship under reciprocal principle lying beneath our social behavioral criteria. However, the validity of the author's assertion is weakened by its overextension of the applicability, given the overstatement discord with some manifest facts which will be detailed below.

Admittedly, telling truth can help strengthen the relationship between people in many aspects. To begin with, people love to know the real opinion of others because only by getting trustable and objective information can they judge the situation correctly make reasonable decision. The information entailed in the truth told by others is valuable for others, so they will be more willing to maintain a relationship with us. Besides, telling truth helps others to improve.
