PLC Opportunities

The Skin I'm In Looking Inward on Racial Equity

This PLC is designed for teams interested in exploring how their personal identity and experience impact their individual practice and shared experience. Through focused structures and protocols designed to support self reflection and honest conversations about race, this PLC will support educators in expanding their perspective, reducing implicit bias and stereotype threat, and unpacking the influence of culture on student-teacher partnerships and student experience. Participants will develop as more culturally and linguistically responsive educators, toward the goal of eliminating racial equity gaps in our schools. This PLC will draw heavily on the work of Courageous Conversations About Race (Glenn Singleton) and the National Equity Project.

- Note: This PLC will closely mirror the work of the original Racial Equity Movement (REM) series initially designed by the Office of Equity and Access. For those that have participated in that series already, we recommend selecting a different PLC (one of the two options below).

Open To: site or department teams meeting requirements as outlined in “Logistics” above

Dates: TBD

Culturally Responsive Practices

Impacting student outcomes and transforming student experience

This PLC is designed for teams interested in building culturally responsive practices within their sites - including teaching practices, student support and intervention practices, behavioral and social-emotional practices, and leadership practices. Drawing heavily on the work of Zaretta Hammond, this PLC will explore current brain science, the impacts of trauma on learning, and culturally responsive practices within the classroom and the larger school. Participants will build competency in identifying, assessing, and addressing site equity gaps, with a heavy emphasis on culturally responsive teaching.

Open To: site teams meeting requirements as outlined in “Logistics” above

Dates: TBD

Schools as Safe Brave Space

Building the Conditions for Equitable Schools

This PLC is designed for teams interested in building and sustaining healthy, “brave” adult culture as a precondition to realizing equity in our schools. While curriculum and equity input is critical, many sites are not ready for this deeply vulnerable work, as the adult culture is fragmented, fear-based, top-down, overly “safe”, disengaged, or otherwise toxic. This PLC will focus on shifting adult culture by engaging in the less tangible work of creating the relationships, trust, discourse, and educator-leadership to have direct, honest conversations about equity - and live (not just talk) equity. Participants will explore how to shift adult culture through equity-centered frameworks, structures, practices, tools, resources, and workshops designed to be brought back to the school site. This PLC will draw heavily on the work of Elena Aguilar, Shane Safir, SF CESS and National Equity Project.

Open To: Site teams meeting requirements as outlined in “Logistics” above
