

Andrew Nugent-Head - Tangible Qi in the Clinic

Demystifying Qi, learning to manipulate Qi, and affecting Qi in your treatments

This foundational seminar first focuses on Demystifying Qi, creating a grounding of what Qi really is and isn't as well as a common language for participants to use when discussing Qi. This is followed by Developing Tangible Qi, which is learning how to tangibly and reliably affect Qi in patients by applying hand techniques to the skin, connective/muscular tissue, and skeletal system. This course also includes video demonstration on needling and personal cultivation exercises to bring to life this material, for immediate clinical application, and reliable repeatable treatment results.

This course has been approved by the NCCAOM for 18.5 continuing education credit hours. Completion of all course videos and an 80% or greater score on the end of course test will automatically generate a certificate of completion to be used toward licensure requirements.
