

Hello penguins! Welcome back to Club Penguin Secrets for another party review. This week, I'll be reviewing the recent Finding Dory Party, which many have debated over in the community. But first, let us review with this video showcasing the party.

And without further ado, let us now initiate the review.

As always, I will begin by discussing the rooms. This party had very few rooms, yet fun decorations and some clever design choices, most especially in the Town Center and the Cove.

The cove has the chairs replaced with clamshells, and the overhead lanterns connecting the Surf Shack to the first responders' building have been replaced with glowing jellyfish. The shrubs near the surfboards have been replaced by various pieces of coral and sea life.

The Town Center has an interesting model as well. The disco ball on the exterior of the Danceclub has been swapped out for a smiling puffer fish, much unlike the puffer fish in Aqua Grabber. The Clothes Shop sign has a shark bite in it, and the blue lamps outside have again been replaced by luminous jellyfish. The plants to the right of the Clothes Shop have been replaced by coral.

One of my favorite details, though, would have to be at the Dock. If you look closely, penguins lined up against the window examining the sea life can be seen. This is similar to fish displays at many zoos across the world.

Now I will examine the music for the party. The first track, 1124, is fast-paced and entertaining. It starts off with a flute or similar instrument and then has an upbeat string instrument as well as a xylophone. It is quite fun, and fits with the Beach's decorations.

The second track, 1125, is a lot more soothing and calm. My favorite part is the ending with the high notes.

Track 1126 is quite peculiar. It has bongo drums playing softly in the background; and one part of this tune, a part toward the end, sound like it was ripped from 313, which played at the Card-Jitsu Party in November 2011.

Track 1127 is good, but quite forgettable. It has what I think is a clarinet, and a harp playing in the background. The piano in the background is quite nice and matches the wind instrument. At one point a violin plays a few notes.

I don't have anything to say about 1128. Moving on.

My favorite music at this party would have to be 1129, which played at the Cove. It is the theme from the Winter Luau, and was used at the April Fools Party 2011 and Operation: Blackout. My favorite part of this song is when the guitar dies down a bit and the main instrument gets quieter. The drums have a bit of an echo effect for a bit then, and it's relaxing.

This party had a good amount of items available. While you could find Rookie and get his background for free, the rest of the items were available by completing tasks in the party interface. While most of the items are okay, some stand out. My favorite costume is the Crush costume. The shading on this one looks especially good.

Two backgrounds were released at this party. While the Finding Dory Background is okay, the Reef Background is very colorful and I always find cool little things about it.

The anemone is really cool and each little blade is shaded perfectly. The coral hut is interesting and has a maze-like texture. There is a portion of what appears to be sand in the bottom corner with a sort of wood-like texture. Fun fact, this background and the Finding Dory Background have the same name on French servers. Oops.

This party has a decent amount of things to play with. Every day until July 13th, you could log in and have another quest to find things. My favorite is from the Cove with the sand, because it was difficult and took me over 5 minutes.

I never would have guessed this spot. It took me a while to find it.

Thanks to 1999bloo for recording this.

My least favorite is the Dock because they didn't put any of the sunglasses in the gift shop where they would blend in. But props to the team at this party; the 3 items were hidden well most of the time, which is something I cannot say for parties such as the ongoing Frozen Fever Party or the School and Skate Party from September 2014.

The story is one of the more forgotten elements of this party. Dory has forgotten her way home and it's your job to collect objects to jog her memory. It's a nice, simple story. I'm not sure how sand would jog memory, but I haven't seen the movie and maybe it's special sand.

This party was disappointing. The content we got was more than decent, but it had the power to be so much more. If they had just decorated three or four more rooms such as the Forest and the Plaza, I might have favored this party over Zootopia, but as it is, Zootopia is a lot better. This party gets a 5.5/10. Goodbye!
