

REGIFTING SCENARIOS

Using the information from the article as a guide, respond to the following scenarios.

#1: Imagine receiving a gift from a close friend that you have no use for and don't particularly like.

How would you handle this situation? What should you say and/or do?

Is it appropriate to regift the item to someone else? If yes, what considerations should you keep in mind?

#2: You've received a thoughtful handmade gift from a family member during a holiday gathering. However, you immediately know you'll never use it!

How do you navigate this situation? What should you say and/or do?

Is it acceptable to regift the item, or should you address the situation differently? Explain

#3: During the office Secret Santa exchange, you receive a gift that doesn't align with your preferences or interests.

Considering the professional setting, how would you handle this situation?

Is it appropriate to regift the item discreetly, or are there other ways to show appreciation? Explain

#4: It's your birthday, and a friend surprises you with a gift that, unfortunately, you already own.

How do you react to this situation?

Is it acceptable to regift the duplicate item, or should you communicate your situation to the friend in a different way?

#5: You attend a celebration where the host decides to play a gift exchange game, and you end up with a present that isn't quite your style. Later, you find out that the host regifted an item they received at a previous event.

How do you personally feel about receiving a regifted present?

Was the host right to be transparent about the gift or should they have kept quiet?
