

Adult Entertainment Business: How Trustworthy Are Strippers in Their Professional Lives?

For it to be a sales pitch, there needs to be something you aren't getting, that you might be interested in buying Chicago strippers. What happens in strip clubs is that you are renting someone's time and attention, nothing more and often much less.

By using the idea of "sales pitch" as a reference point, you are basically suggesting that either the dancer in question is:

Interested in you genuinely, socially, possibly romantically, or A prostitute

It's very unlikely that a successful career prostitute would work as a stripper regularly for a variety of reasons - or at least, that she would overlap the two job roles. Not going into the reasons for that here, but trust me.

Thus, the question is really whether or not she's interested in you personally, and how you can judge this. Let's assume that your horrible assumptions about her do not offend, and proceed in the spirit of trying to discover if she might really like you.

Ready to have your balloon deflated?

You never know. Not with prostitutes. Not with strippers. Not with sexy librarians. Not with anyone. That's kind of the message of life: we guarantee you nothing, so what are you gonna do about it?

Many Chicago strippers form true friendships, and romantic relationships with customers. It happens every day. Many customers are also provided, largely in exchange for money, with some simulacra of that experience (though, constrained to the internal perimeter of the club).

If you get to a point where you feel you are owed something "real" given how much money you've spent, you have lost.

If you get to a point where you need to spend money to get attention, you have lost.

The counter indicators are far from 100% accurate (and, largely irrelevant), but essentially what you're looking for are the following:

- Someone who remembers your name, and smiles when they see you, even if they are with another customer.
- Someone who picks up the conversation where it left off. Given how much of their job is conversation, remembering one they had with a specific guest a week or more ago is not going to be easy for most.
- Someone who gives you contact info or invites you to an off-site event.

Strip clubs Chicago strippers require a specific mindset to survive emotionally intact over repeat visits. It's a lot like gambling: you set aside how much money you're willing to lose in advance in exchange for a no-expectations good time, and you're going to be much happier. If, in the course of your spend, you wind up having a blast with a particular dancer, then consider that a windfall of time/attention/experience beyond what you paid for.

Parlaying that into more is your job - and again, how specifically to do that in a way that gets past her safety barriers or customer-ick-factor is a different question... But the same is really true of anyone, regardless of what they do for a living. Be interesting, and make an invitation they can't resist, but have no obligation to attend. 95% of the time, they won't show up, and then you'll have your answer.

The remaining 5%, though, is a 50-50 split between the letdown of realizing how different someone in showbiz looks/acts when not "in costume/in character", and the stuff of dirty magazine letter columns.

Sorry for all the blather. Long story short: stop worrying about whether her interest in you is real. Assume nothing, and pursue your desires with full effort and with enough tact to read ambivalent signals as a clear "no".

If none of the above works for you, study to become a pro masseur. Then when you buy private booth/room dances, offer them a free massage instead of getting the dance. A stimulating light foot massage can help them stay on their feet until the end of a shift, usually passes bouncer/camera inspection, and shows an appreciation and understanding of the hard job they do. Plus, that way you actually have a beautiful woman moaning in pleasure at your touch, you see pretty much everything you were gonna see anyway, and there's the very slim chance you might get called (professionally or otherwise) if you leave her your card.
