Jeffrey Mecaskey, FFPH is a health & political economist with over 35 years' experience working in international development, focusing on health policy and management, with multilaterals, the private sector, government and NGOs. Trained at London, Liverpool and Harvard Universities, Mecaskey work has centred on health & political economics in strategic purchasing; multi-stakeholder policy processes; and the planning, implementation and evaluation of health programming. He has recently served as Team Leader on the UK Government's flagship for pandemic preparedness in Africa and prior to that Team Leader on strategy development on strengthening adherence to International Health Regulations with Public Health England; Principal Advisor on Organisational Effectiveness for UNDP; and Senior Advisor on the transition to development assistance in the multi-sectoral response to malnutrition in Karamoja, Uganda. In addition to founding/leading organisations in his day job, he has chaired/served on several programme, research and not-for-profit boards.