

Role: Madison (Employer)

- Looking to fill six positions: available budget of $300,000
- You know Logan (E), Chloe (E), Abigail (C), and Caden (you are the parent of Caden)

For Employers:

Your goal is to hire the best workers you can to fill your open positions. You can choose your hiring preferences however you want. However, you will probably evaluate based on GPA, ranking of college (either UNC or UNC-G), ease of major, and personality/likability of the person job seeker. Some of you personally know people who are applying for jobs. You are allowed to take that into account and give preference to hiring people you already know or you can choose to not allow that to be a factor. It's entirely up to you.

Note that you do not all have the same salaries to offer your employees, nor are you all looking to fill the same number of positions. Therefore, you don't know exactly what the competition looks like. However, you know many other Employers, so you are allowed to ask each other. But remember, this is a competition! Your fellow employers will be competing with you for the best Job Seekers so it is up to you what information you want to share.

As noted in the instructions for everyone, the Employers must interview at least 5 people before they can begin to offer jobs to anyone. The interview can be whatever you want it to be as long as it is face-to-face, but likely will include the Job Seeker giving their name and their qualifications. However, you can have the Job Seeker talk about whatever you want them to. Assuming you've already interviewed at least 5 people, you can decide whether to offer someone a job right on the spot or go find them later.

Rules:

- 1) You must write down the name of everyone you interview. For your own sake, you also probably want to write down their qualifications so that you can remember who you might want to hire.
- 2) You must interview at least 5 job seekers before you can offer anyone a position. After you have interviewed at least 5 job seekers, you may begin offering jobs.
- 3) Once a job seeker accepts the position it is filled. You cannot rescind a job offer that has already been accepted if you find a better candidate later.
- 4) Once you fill all your positions, tell the instructor.

Role: Logan (Employer)

- Looking to fill four positions: available budget of $160,000
- You know Madison (E), Chloe (E), Alexander (E), Abigail (C), and Oliver (you owe Oliver's family a favor)

For Employers:

Your goal is to hire the best workers you can to fill your open positions. You can choose your hiring preferences however you want. However, you will probably evaluate based on GPA, ranking of college (either UNC or UNC-G), ease of major, and personality/likability of the person job seeker. Some of you personally know people who are applying for jobs. You are allowed to take that into account and give preference to hiring people you already know or you can choose to not allow that to be a factor. It's entirely up to you.

Note that you do not all have the same salaries to offer your employees, nor are you all looking to fill the same number of positions. Therefore, you don't know exactly what the competition looks like. However, you know many other Employers, so you are allowed to ask each other. But remember, this is a competition! Your fellow employers will be competing with you for the best Job Seekers so it is up to you what information you want to share.

As noted in the instructions for everyone, the Employers must interview at least 5 people before they can begin to offer jobs to anyone. The interview can be whatever you want it to be as long as it is face-to-face, but likely will include the Job Seeker giving their name and their qualifications. However, you can have the Job Seeker talk about whatever you want them to. Assuming you've already interviewed at least 5 people, you can decide whether to offer someone a job right on the spot or go find them later.

Rules:

- 1) You must write down the name of everyone you interview. For your own sake, you also probably want to write down their qualifications so that you can remember who you might want to hire.
- 2) You must interview at least 5 job seekers before you can offer anyone a position. After you have interviewed at least 5 job seekers, you may begin offering jobs.
- 3) Once a job seeker accepts the position it is filled. You cannot rescind a job offer that has already been accepted if you find a better candidate later.
- 4) Once you fill all your positions, tell the instructor.

Role: Chloe (Employer)

- Looking to fill four positions: available budget of $160,000;
- You know Madison (E), Logan (E), Alexander (E), Abigail (C), Ryan (C), Caden (good friend of Aria), and Aria (you are a close family friend of Aria's family)

For Employers:

Your goal is to hire the best workers you can to fill your open positions. You can choose your hiring preferences however you want. However, you will probably evaluate based on GPA, ranking of college (either UNC or UNC-G), ease of major, and personality/likability of the person job seeker. Some of you personally know people who are applying for jobs. You are allowed to take that into account and give preference to hiring people you already know or you can choose to not allow that to be a factor. It's entirely up to you.

Note that you do not all have the same salaries to offer your employees, nor are you all looking to fill the same number of positions. Therefore, you don't know exactly what the competition looks like. However, you know many other Employers, so you are allowed to ask each other. But remember, this is a competition! Your fellow employers will be competing with you for the best Job Seekers so it is up to you what information you want to share.

As noted in the instructions for everyone, the Employers must interview at least 5 people before they can begin to offer jobs to anyone. The interview can be whatever you want it to be as long as it is face-to-face, but likely will include the Job Seeker giving their name and their qualifications. However, you can have the Job Seeker talk about whatever you want them to. Assuming you've already interviewed at least 5 people, you can decide whether to offer someone a job right on the spot or go find them later.

Rules:

- 1) You must write down the name of everyone you interview. For your own sake, you also probably want to write down their qualifications so that you can remember who you might want to hire.
- 2) You must interview at least 5 job seekers before you can offer anyone a position. After you have interviewed at least 5 job seekers, you may begin offering jobs.
- 3) Once a job seeker accepts the position it is filled. You cannot rescind a job offer that has already been accepted if you find a better candidate later.
- 4) Once you fill all your positions, tell the instructor.

Role: Alexander (Employer)

- Looking to fill four positions: available budget of $150,000
- You know Logan (E), Chloe (E), Caleb (E), Harper (E), Abigail (C), Ryan (C), Aria (child of an acquaintance of yours), and Jack (you are a close family friend of Jack's family)

For Employers:

Your goal is to hire the best workers you can to fill your open positions. You can choose your hiring preferences however you want. However, you will probably evaluate based on GPA, ranking of college (either UNC or UNC-G), ease of major, and personality/likability of the person job seeker. Some of you personally know people who are applying for jobs. You are allowed to take that into account and give preference to hiring people you already know or you can choose to not allow that to be a factor. It's entirely up to you.

Note that you do not all have the same salaries to offer your employees, nor are you all looking to fill the same number of positions. Therefore, you don't know exactly what the competition looks like. However, you know many other Employers, so you are allowed to ask each other. But remember, this is a competition! Your fellow employers will be competing with you for the best Job Seekers so it is up to you what information you want to share.

As noted in the instructions for everyone, the Employers must interview at least 5 people before they can begin to offer jobs to anyone. The interview can be whatever you want it to be as long as it is face-to-face, but likely will include the Job Seeker giving their name and their qualifications. However, you can have the Job Seeker talk about whatever you want them to. Assuming you've already interviewed at least 5 people, you can decide whether to offer someone a job right on the spot or go find them later.

Rules:

- 1) You must write down the name of everyone you interview. For your own sake, you also probably want to write down their qualifications so that you can remember who you might want to hire.
- 2) You must interview at least 5 job seekers before you can offer anyone a position. After you have interviewed at least 5 job seekers, you may begin offering jobs.
- 3) Once a job seeker accepts the position it is filled. You cannot rescind a job offer that has already been accepted if you find a better candidate later.
- 4) Once you fill all your positions, tell the instructor.

Role: Harper (Employer)

- Looking to fill three positions: available budget of $100,000
- You know Alexander (E), Caleb (E), Abigail (C), Ryan (C), and Charlotte (you are the parent of Charlotte)

For Employers:

Your goal is to hire the best workers you can to fill your open positions. You can choose your hiring preferences however you want. However, you will probably evaluate based on GPA, ranking of college (either UNC or UNC-G), ease of major, and personality/likability of the person job seeker. Some of you personally know people who are applying for jobs. You are allowed to take that into account and give preference to hiring people you already know or you can choose to not allow that to be a factor. It's entirely up to you.

Note that you do not all have the same salaries to offer your employees, nor are you all looking to fill the same number of positions. Therefore, you don't know exactly what the competition looks like. However, you know many other Employers, so you are allowed to ask each other. But remember, this is a competition! Your fellow employers will be competing with you for the best Job Seekers so it is up to you what information you want to share.

As noted in the instructions for everyone, the Employers must interview at least 5 people before they can begin to offer jobs to anyone. The interview can be whatever you want it to be as long as it is face-to-face, but likely will include the Job Seeker giving their name and their qualifications. However, you can have the Job Seeker talk about whatever you want them to. Assuming you've already interviewed at least 5 people, you can decide whether to offer someone a job right on the spot or go find them later.

Rules:

- 1) You must write down the name of everyone you interview. For your own sake, you also probably want to write down their qualifications so that you can remember who you might want to hire.
- 2) You must interview at least 5 job seekers before you can offer anyone a position. After you have interviewed at least 5 job seekers, you may begin offering jobs.
- 3) Once a job seeker accepts the position it is filled. You cannot rescind a job offer that has already been accepted if you find a better candidate later.
- 4) Once you fill all your positions, tell the instructor.

Role: Caleb (Employer)

- Looking to fill two positions: available budget of $50,000
- You know Alexander (E), Harper (E), Ryan (C), and Charlotte (you owe Charlotte's family a favor)

For Employers:

Your goal is to hire the best workers you can to fill your open positions. You can choose your hiring preferences however you want. However, you will probably evaluate based on GPA, ranking of college (either UNC or UNC-G), ease of major, and personality/likability of the person job seeker. Some of you personally know people who are applying for jobs. You are allowed to take that into account and give preference to hiring people you already know or you can choose to not allow that to be a factor. It's entirely up to you.

Note that you do not all have the same salaries to offer your employees, nor are you all looking to fill the same number of positions. Therefore, you don't know exactly what the competition looks like. However, you know many other Employers, so you are allowed to ask each other. But remember, this is a competition! Your fellow employers will be competing with you for the best Job Seekers so it is up to you what information you want to share.

As noted in the instructions for everyone, the Employers must interview at least 5 people before they can begin to offer jobs to anyone. The interview can be whatever you want it to be as long as it is face-to-face, but likely will include the Job Seeker giving their name and their qualifications. However, you can have the Job Seeker talk about whatever you want them to. Assuming you've already interviewed at least 5 people, you can decide whether to offer someone a job right on the spot or go find them later.

Rules:

- 1) You must write down the name of everyone you interview. For your own sake, you also probably want to write down their qualifications so that you can remember who you might want to hire.
- 2) You must interview at least 5 job seekers before you can offer anyone a position. After you have interviewed at least 5 job seekers, you may begin offering jobs.
- 3) Once a job seeker accepts the position it is filled. You cannot rescind a job offer that has already been accepted if you find a better candidate later.
- 4) Once you fill all your positions, tell the instructor.

Role: Sophia (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.9 GPA; hard major
- You know Jackson, Emma, Aiden, and Abigail (C)

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Jackson (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.8 GPA; hard major
- You know Sophia, Emma, Aiden, and Abigail (C)

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Emma (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.7 GPA; hard major
- You know Sophia, Jackson, and Aiden

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Aiden (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.6 GPA; hard major
- You know Sophia, Emma, Jackson, Liam, and Benjamin

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Olivia (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.9 GPA; hard major
- You know Lucas, Ava, and Ryan (C)

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Lucas (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.8 GPA; hard major
- You know Olivia and Ava

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Ava (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.7 GPA; hard major
- You know Lucas, Olivia, Isabella, Jayden, and Ryan (C)

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Liam (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 2.8 GPA; hard major
- You know Mia, Noah, and Aiden

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Mia (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 2.9 GPA; hard major
- You know Liam and Noah

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Noah (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.0 GPA; hard major
- You know Mia and Liam

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Isabella (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.1 GPA; hard major
- You know Ethan, Riley, and Ava

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Ethan (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.0 GPA; hard major
- You know Isabella and Riley

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Riley (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.1 GPA; hard major
- You know Isabella and Ethan

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Caden (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.4 GPA; easy major
- You know Aria, Oliver, Zoe, Abigail (C), Madison (E; your parent), and Chloe (E; you know because Chloe is a close family friend of Aria)

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Aria (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.5 GPA; easy major
- You know Caden, Oliver, Zoe, Abigail (C), Chloe (E; a close family friend), and Alexander (E; you are the child of an acquaintance of Alexander)

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Oliver (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.6 GPA; easy major
- You know Caden, Aria, Zoe, Abigail (C), and Logan (E; owes your family a favor)

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Zoe (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.6 GPA; easy major
- You know Caden, Oliver, Aria, and Lily

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Jack (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.4 GPA; easy major
- You know Charlotte, Elijah, Ryan (C), and Alexander (E; a close family friend)

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Charlotte (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.5 GPA; easy major
- You know Jack, Elijah, Ryan (C), Harper (E; your parent), and Caleb (E; owes your family a favor)

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Elijah (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.3 GPA; easy major
- You know Charlotte, Jack, Ryan (C), and Jacob

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Lily (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.0 GPA; easy major
- You know Zoe, Grayson, and Layla

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Grayson (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.1 GPA; easy major
- You know Lily and Layla

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Layla (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 2.9 GPA; easy major
- You know Lily and Grayson

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Jacob (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 2.9 GPA; easy major
- You know Elijah, Amelia, and Michael

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Amelia (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.0 GPA; easy major
- You know Jacob and Michael

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Michael (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.1 GPA; easy major
- You know Jacob and Amelia

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Emily (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.8 GPA; hard major
- You know Benjamin, Aubrey, James, Adalyn, and Jayden

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Benjamin (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 4.0 GPA; hard major
- You know Emily, Aubrey, Madelyn, and Aiden

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Madelyn (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.9 GPA; hard major
- You know Benjamin, Carter, and Aubrey

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Carter (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC; 3.7 GPA; hard major
- You know Madelyn and Aubrey

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Aubrey (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.8 GPA; hard major
- You know Emily, Benjamin, Madelyn, Carter, and James

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: James (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.9 GPA; hard major
- You know Aubrey, Emily, Adalyn

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Adalyn (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 4.0 GPA; hard major
- You know James, Jayden, and Emily

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Jayden (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.7 GPA; hard major
- You know Emily, Adalyn, and Ava

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Abigail (Connector)

- You know Sophia, Jackson, Caden, Aria, Oliver, Ryan (C), Madison (E), Logan (E), Chloe (E), Alexander (E), and Harper (E)

For Connectors:

You have a more elusive goal than everyone else. Your goal is simply to help other people achieve their goals. You have always prioritized being well-known and connected (both because you enjoy it and know it could be helpful for you later). Therefore, you will use your connections to help connect other people. It will make people like you even more than they already do and you will probably get the opportunity to meet even more people along the way—always a goal of yours!

You are allowed to prioritize who you help. These priorities can be based on anything you choose (be it personality/likeability, degree of connection to that person from the beginning, or even something as generally looked down upon as race or gender). Likely no one will know how you are choosing your priorities nor are you accountable to anyone, so you can do whatever you like with the position. That being said, you don't have to prioritize anyone. You can just sit back and wait for people to seek you out for help. You will almost certainly have a long line of people waiting to meet you or get your help during quite a bit of the game.

Role: Ryan (Connector)

- You know Olivia, Ava, Jack, Charlotte, Elijah, Chloe (E), Alexander (E), Harper (E), and Caleb (E)

For Connectors:

You have a more elusive goal than everyone else. Your goal is simply to help other people achieve their goals. You have always prioritized being well-known and connected (both because you enjoy it and know it could be helpful for you later). Therefore, you will use your connections to help connect other people. It will make people like you even more than they already do and you will probably get the opportunity to meet even more people along the way—always a goal of yours!

You are allowed to prioritize who you help. These priorities can be based on anything you choose (be it personality/likeability, degree of connection to that person from the beginning, or even something as generally looked down upon as race or gender). Likely no one will know how you are choosing your priorities nor are you accountable to anyone, so you can do whatever you like with the position. That being said, you don't have to prioritize anyone. You can just sit back and wait for people to seek you out for help. You will almost certainly have a long line of people waiting to meet you or get your help during quite a bit of the game.

Role: Aaliyah (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.6 GPA; hard major
- You know James

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Luke (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.5 GPA; hard major
- You know James

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.

Role: Avery (Job Seeker)

- Qualifications: UNC-G; 3.5 GPA; hard major
- You know James

For Job Seekers:

Your goal is to get hired. You will probably also preference getting a higher salary, though you are not required to. In order to get hired, you must be interviewed for a job, be offered a position by an Employer, and then accept that job. Remember, there are more Job Seekers than jobs (though you don't know how many more) so you will probably try to make your connections and get interviews as quickly as possible.

Some of you have more connections to other people and some of you have better connections than others. As stated in the instructions to everyone, you are never required to make an introduction at any point (though you may hurt yourself if you never help anyone). However, you can choose how quickly you are willing to introduce people. For instance, you may prioritize your own self-interest first and then after that prioritize helping others or you can do both at the same time—it is totally up to you.

Rules:

- 1) Keep track of the number of interviews you have. This will be helpful for you later—you're always allowed to follow back up with employers to see if they are interested in you once they have interviewed their mandatory five.
- 2) You cannot accept more than one job. Once you have officially accepted a position you cannot keep interviewing for more positions nor can you rescind an acceptance if you were to hear about a better opportunity.