Apparently there is a debunk on my doc which further would address those things said Part 1 most likely.

Firstly nowhere in the danganronpa canon is it stated that Izuru possesses the memories of the original founder, nor does it ever state that he possesses any semblance of that identity. In fact, Izuru was only named after the original founder and had no memories of that past life. It is also stated multiple times by Izuru himself that he is unaware of Hajime's memories. Ironically in the time stamp provided Izuru states that he is unaware of who the body originally belonged to and his past identity - Nor there are statements stating otherwise, no? Sure, let's see.

"Between the timestamps 4:38 - 4:51:

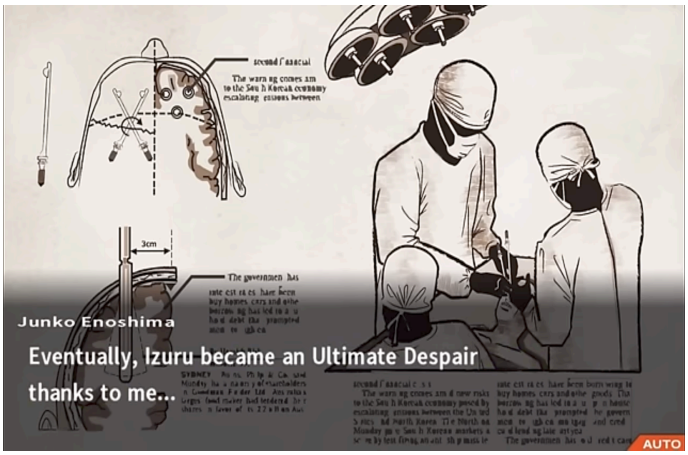

Chiaki: "You're still in there aren't you?"

Izuru: "Was that my name? Is that whose body this used to be? All vestiges of the former identity have been erased to make way for me." Right here the problem within this statement made, 'Ironically in the time stamp provided Izuru states that he is unaware of who the body originally belonged to and his past identity' Uhhh did you read his dialogues carefully? Not once there is a confirmation that debunks the notion and where did this come from exactly? 'Izuru states that he is unaware of who the body originally belonged to and his past identity' All Izuru had said thus far that he had no way knowing who's the current body he was in he never affirms the idea nor confirms that he didn't got the memories of the said founder entitled well that's very nice to assume don't you think? I need Izuru stating this directly 'I did not get the founders memories' be concise and be precise if you will. Well I guess that's a nice strawman don't you say? Or just confirm your point in the way your point would be understood if you meant something else by that next time clarify if you did made a mistake on this which I highly doubt indeed overall since I couldn't care less about FSIQ and it's useless for outsmarting obviously but I won't go on about not defending the doc I made out of boredom since it did required some few analysis then and there it would be a waste, no?

Between the timestamps 0:08 - 0:18

Scientist: "You have been born anew. A phoenix from the ashes. I hereby christen you Izuru Kamukura in honor of our school's glorious founder." - Yes this was my point Izuru in Hajime's body is only the 'representer' if taken account on the statement which had thus far had gotten the said memories, experience it's pretty illogical to think and absolute nonsense that few questions would arise like let's say,

'Why did Izuru obtain the talents and luck without recovering the memories too?' When there's legit a scan for this that affirms the idea a brain surgery was performed if all,

A brain surgery for what exactly? In order to perform the said transaction it would be Illogical to think that Izuru would only get the talents, luck, but not the memories obtained by it? Yet again as long as these facts remain there were further no contradictions on this line of thinking.

1. Not once we ever get to see the whole operation.

2. Not once do we get to see the whole picture of the entire surgery not as well explained fully in the game, anime and further possibilities are still lined up.

Also why are we completely trusting the narration of the person speaking? It was never clarified that the narration of the character that are currently talking can be trusted if all since again we really never get to see who worked with the project and the person speaking is simply a spectator of the scene like many others the 'debunk' is rather just assuming this so hit me up with the confirmation that the person speaking can be trusted if all, If my stance is an assumption then kindly answer this with 'actual evidence' and made statements the character did made that they worked on the project the only time I can rather be satisfied is the people getting stated that they worked on the project the scan I gave with the uniform and all well then since I'll be questioning every bit I'll notice some few holes then and there.

In the end this would only rely on a possibility unless proven with scans that the person speaking can be trusted. I'm talking about this dialogue if I'm not accurate enough 'Scientist: "You have been born anew. A phoenix from the ashes. I hereby christen you Izuru Kamukura in honor of our school's glorious founder.' Uhhh where did you get the scientist from exactly? I'd gladly fix my fallacies if all but I need to be satisfied with concrete evidence of the narrator of the scene can be trusted since not only this is only a possibility, the person speaking might had been making some few comments then and there on the spot first judgment I'd say reconfirm this belief with evidence if you will well that be all for this one. I need a direct statement clarifying the said 'scientist' or the author confirming this.

The original document fails to provide any scans or video evidence directly proving that Izuru inherited the memories of the school's founder. Moreover, it assumes that Izuru processed this information immediately after his "rebirth," despite no such statements existing in the anime. The anime explicitly states that Izuru was simply named after the founder, rather than being the founder himself. - Off-screen feats are up to interpretation and the best interpretation of this feat would be this again as long those two facts remain as a full confirmation on this point, possibilities like this would technically exist since after all a possibility is a possibility unless?

The memory statement was disproven above which leaves the points that he had processed through his abilities and adapted to Hajime's body.

While it's true that Izuru possesses all talents from all students, the document's assumption that he learned all these abilities in a singular moment lacks evidence. Additionally, the document's assertion that Izuru accurately knew this and fully adapted to Hajime's body quite easily can be explained without resorting to PSI, as the document suggests.- I wouldn't like you to assume that you did whoever 'you' are writing this doc debunk as long as I'm not satisfied I would never stop debunking any docs made, that fully lacks in evidence, where Izuru himself stated 'make way for me' there's many ways to interpret this line and that's what I did. Further on your point, yes he possessed everything again I never once said 'he learned all these abilities in a singular moment' This is what I have said 'It's a simple thing really, the moment Izuru woke up, his eyes, body moves, the information here gets recovered instantly' Again another strawman made in the doc as if they didn't fully read the doc I never once said he learned this he already possessed every singular talents that was further mentioned in my doc, abilities that was in his Hajime's body and that operated in the surgery all I have said he recovered his past abilities, experience, memories you can even take a look on the doc again if you want to confirm my point or you're yet again having a bad wording on this be precise as I have said, about the lacking evidence I already did explain this point I won't bother going back and forth, while you have said is correct it would be incorrect if the possibility of the PSI didn't exist which I did argue then and there as I'm doing at the moment. Well then we would move on, Izuru's own explanation about his memory loss emphasizes the fact that his memories had been erased prior to his rebirth. This is an important notion to understand before continuing into why the feat described in the document is invalid. At first analysis, it might seem reasonable to assume that he instantly acquired all knowledge and abilities at the moment of his "rebirth." However, this explanation is both unrealistic and contradicted by the nature of the program that created Izuru.- Yes that is correct on the first statement I do agree if you meant by Hajime however if it is the founder then I already laid out my arguments if so, enlighten me why it's invalid I'll gladly hear you out. 'It might seem reasonable to assume that he instantly acquired all knowledge and abilities at the moment' Yet again a strawman, I never once said he acquired it he already acquired the said talents, abilities, knowledge prior to the operation what he recovered on the very first time he woke up is the memories that he recovered of the founder in itself. 'this explanation is both unrealistic and contradicted by the nature of the program that created Izuru' Uhh hello? You're trying to say Danganronpa isn't unrealistic? Contradicted how so? Enlighten me for sure If the least that contradicts you instead, within two days Izuru Kamukura was created in the Izuru Kamukura project by the Hope's peak academy a high level genius that in itself should be considered unrealistic the fact that they can legit make an average human being like Hajime who has zero talent to a super genius and operated a person that overrides the person's memories and applies said memories, talents, abilities on someone the verse in itself is unrealistic given on the hax as well that Izuru has, my explanations as well goes with every point and considering the unrealism of Danganronpa these doc shouldn't be questioned in the first place nor this point should exist but it's fine I digress.

The Hope Cultivation Plan, the program responsible for Izuru's creation, involved altering Hajime's brain to transform him into Izuru experimented on Hajime's brain during the process of creating Izuru. Therefore, it's logical to infer that when Izuru woke up, he already possessed all the talents encoded in his mind. Which raises the question: how is this explanation different from the reasoning provided in the original document? Additionally, it may lead to new questions, such as how Izuru already had these talents if his memory was just wiped, and whether this still requires processing information. These questions will be addressed in the following explanation.- Again I agree with the first statement made, however 'Therefore, it's logical to infer that when Izuru woke up, he already possessed all the talents encoded in his mind' That was my point, you really didn't read the doc didn't you? What he recovered in the first time he woke up is the said memories of the founder implemented into his brain, mindset Izuru who's asleep in the sleeping pod cannot be awaken to recover his memory unless interference would be there so as soon as he woke up, in his own cognition recovered the said memories, while having the talents, abilities already that operated in the surgery basic common sense. Enlighten me with those reasoning.

Izuru's situation at birth shares similarities with individuals affected by mental disorders like dementia and Alzheimer's. These conditions significantly impair cognitive function, often resulting in profound memory loss extending over several years. Despite the prominent memory deficits, motor skills tend to remain relatively intact. Individuals may retain learned skills, even without conscious recollection of the learning process. This suggests that Izuru may not have needed to acquire all his skills immediately upon awakening but could have already possessed them, similar to the retention of procedural memories in individuals with cognitive impairments.- Illogical nonsense this legit doesn't make any sense if you think about it and the doc maker, I would have agreed if Izuru affirms or something in return was stated in the Anime if all, enlighten me with those scans, this reasoning is flawed, as long as there is zero scan given on the point till then this possibility is full of contradiction and holes if not given enough evidence. About the last remark that's legit my one of my points, his memories of the said founder are what he recovered not the talents, abilities, skills since that was already operated.

This explanation offers a more plausible alternative to the assumptions made in the document, as it doesn't rely on unverifiable assumptions. Additionally, it aligns with the known facts that Hajime's brain underwent experimentation and rigorous conditioning and training before his transformation into Izuru.- Not at all mine was more acceptable, since I did give scans and lines, statements to use such an interpretation that should be given if all, 'as it doesn't rely on unverifiable assumptions' Ironic since all you did is assume anyways I'll await for the scan since I myself gave one I better see a statement made by Izuru stating 'I have dementia' on the next remark mine as well are aligned with the facts given, since yet again it is confirmed that these things did happen as long as these two facts yet again remains, we can't confirm anything nor debunk anything in said conclusion.

1. Not once we ever get to see the whole operation.

2. Not once do we get to see the whole picture of the entire surgery not as well explained fully in the game, anime and further possibilities are still lined up.

The final point I shall discuss in this document is the statements made regarding the point regarding Izuru's PSI against Junko. While I don't have many disagreements with the idea regarding Izuru dodging Junko's bat, the explanation provided in the document is very misleading and lacks evidence to support its conclusions. - It's not just PSI but VSI as well Izuru as seen at this time stamp 0:05 was casually observing Junko if all that takes time where he can analyze the situation with his Ultimate analysis talent by that it lines up pretty well the instant movements of Junko was already been predicted and visualized by Izuru completely yet again I don't get these lacking in evidence it's a genuine feat done by Izuru scans itself, https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=usc9eY8eWpM&ab_channel=Amia_p While that I'll elaborate further if you'd like as I have said Izuru had the time to analyze Junko at that scene he might have recalled his other interaction on Junko, predicting her actions by far and visualizing her movements as seen in the scan.

Firstly it lacks any evidence to show how they arrived at the number "Speed of visualizing? 0.000000003 milliseconds speed without once glancing nor looking, 147 Frames speed." The document assumes that it is required for Izuru to visualize Junko's full body while avoiding her bat. When avoiding an object an individual does not need to visualize the object, they simply need to have fast enough PSI to react to the object and avoid it. - Nice well I don't know if this further confirms my point that you didn't read the doc fully but I digress anyways it's been calmly stated in the doc that 'Correction 0.000000003 milliseconds is lowball of the feat it should have been 0.000000001 milliseconds because it happened in an instant where Junko starts attacking Izuru with the consecutives of battling and I have overlooked this' And not 0.000000003 milliseconds as you have stated, I highly doubt you comprehended my points in the first page of the doc but yet again we can't know and we digress I'll go with your point now, yes Izuru has to visualize the attacks, he's legit not looking? How can he process the images of battling without even looking? Well he has too since his eyes are literally closed? But yeah that be all for this 'debunk' I'd await for a more good response and arguments with prior scans that I asked.

Afterword

About the afterword in this doc, well I'll just say I don't really care if you're going to make another doc or even at that point we'd reach to an absolute 30 docs separate back and forth I won't mind as I have said my boredom at that point would be worsen but at the moment it's fun right now I don't know who you are but if I were to know who you are just know this I'm watching you and once I knew who you are I'll dox you just to ease my boredom you'll become this pedophile that I doxxed months ago

Just kidding, anyways my point stands if the next doc did not contain that can satisfy my said questions, rebuttals on the points given this most likely would go over and go back and forth as I predict that would be I already did state the reasoning above but that would be it for this doc. Also if you're curious his name is Marcos Nicolas and he lives in Mexico

