World Cultures is a year-long course studying cultures of people in major world regions and their interactions with the geography they inhabit. Some examples of the instructional approaches used to examine these themes include discussion, debate, role-playing, lecture, and individual and group projects. Students will read both the major text and in supplementary sources. They will refine many of the skills vital to success in future history and geography courses, including the analysis of maps, statistics, documents and the ability to express their analysis of events in writing.
