How My Little Pony Exposes Hypocrisy In The Brony Fandom

Sayori Akemi

Mar 19 · 3 min read

UPDATE: Due to Fable Tale getting harassed from my mentioning of her in the article, I've removed (with the exception of this update) any mention of her from the article as damage control. Stop harassing Fable, because she doesn't deserve any of it over my opinions.

Remember that article I wrote about ToonKriticY2K? For people who haven't read it yet (and for people who refuse to read it because of what people like Spoken Mind say about it), all I said was that like sex offenders people need to give Zak a chance to show us that he's changed as a human being.

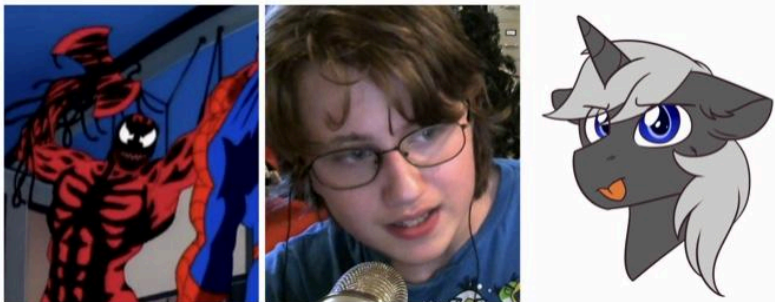

Why I Think ToonKriticY2K
Needs A Starlight Redemptio...

Why I personally feel the brony fandom's most notorius name...
medium.com

**cue the fake outrage**

The opinion I presented in that article alone, instead of enlightening people and making them realize I actually had a valid point, made them double down on the established belief in the brony community that Toon was this irredeemable monster who needs to be hunted down until the day he dies. Spoken blocked me and falsely declared me a pedo defender, I had a (admittedly funny) confrontation in the Top Of The Barrel about what I said, and about the only people who listened and respected what I said were Armada, Ephrom Josine (who is no longer in the brony community), and Blazing Blade (of Wubcake infamy).

The only support (and respect from Ephrom, who didn't agree with my stance) I had after the Toon article was published.

The blatant hypocrisy in the brony fandom is insane. For a show that teaches us about respecting people's differences and helping them realize the mistakes they've made, along with overall bettering ourselves so that the world in turn can be a better place to live in, most people in the fandom do everything but. There are exceptions of course, and I know many of the people within the fandom doing everything they can to rid the community of some of the worst people in it (like Fable and Fusion, for example).

Unfortunately, sometimes the worst people in the fandom usually have a completely different public persona most people assume is how they are in everyday life.

The infamous duo.

In comes Wubcake and ILoveKPALot. These two are notorius for having completely different private personas compared to their public ones. On the surface both of them are extremely approachable people who will be the best part of your life. Many people in the fandom will be quick to defend them from any and all criticism. That's where reality and I come in.

Exposed, bitch.

Almost 18 minutes of straight analysis into how disgusting of a person KP is was conducted by Winged Fusion (the one I acknowledged earlier) way back in 2017. Even though this video is close to being two years old, a lot of what was discussed in the video is still relevant to this very day.

It's sad how a joke Tweet can be this accurate.

And as for Wubcake, all you have to do is visit her Twitter:

Wubcake: reeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeee

Reporting one of my online friends last year to other cons because your ego won't let you take criticism.
Classy move, Wub.

Blazing Blade is seriously a messed up troll I wouldn't waste your breath on him. He calls me a cunt, participates in anti wubcake twitters then defends me xD lol he needs some therapy.

Way to treat your fans, Wubcake. Go fuck yourself.

Yeah, enough said.

There's a lot of problems I haven't discussed yet, so I'll just end this article with the people I consider the most problematic.
