Simplicity is underrated. Proof:

Hey, Marshall. I hope you are doing well.

Nothing is like a good old Simple and forward approach.

Saying straight and forward, "I was broke and had no money!": gives people a "lens" of respect and sympathy towards your status and achievements.

I liked this statement because Many people search for someone they can relate to and look up to.

As you know, most people struggle financially, especially young men.

Online money-making is a good solution; I would love to make one business (or more) in that niche thrive.

When I entered your website via your channel, I noticed little explanation about the learning process of each day of the course.

You could make the description of the stages throughout the course sound more exciting and attractive by adding extra info to leave interest in the reader's mind.

That will make him want to know more about the course until they eventually decide to try it themselves.

Example: days 1-3:

Of course, I understand you already have a lot on your plate, so I would appreciate it if you could invest five minutes for the sake of-

1) Reading my copy.
2) Decide if you want me to share more ways I could contribute to your business (via Gmail/ Zoom call.)

Please let me know your decision in the chat.

Best regards- Ariel
