

The North Star Questions

This most competitive possible version of myself,

What would he do with his time today?

What advantages would he create for himself?

What things are you afraid of doing right now, have been putting off, that he would do even though he's just as scared as you?

What garbage would he cut from your life this week to be as productive as possible?

What habits would he have?

How would he track and measure his progress, output and success?

How would he use the Real World more effectively?

How would he use and improve his existing network?

What beliefs would he focus on this week?

What would he not tolerate about your current life? What key objectives is he obsessed with achieving? Why?

-
1. He would optimize his time for learning the skills necessary to improve his skills, -> Write down notes per lesson and share them in the chats to gain further insights.
 2. He would gain more knowledge and convince himself that this is the only way to progress so therefore I must focus, and implement these tasks into my work. (Competence)

Whatever knowledge he gains from the lessons he will implement as soon as possible.

3. He would relearn the bootcamp even if he didn't feel like it because he understands that if he doesn't he will keep running into the brick wall
(Writer's block, unknowns, assumptions Etc)
4. He would cut out chess so that he could dedicate more time into his work.
He would also cut out communicating in the chats too often.
This has been a time-vampire, and an excuse.
Root cause is needed for this
Since It's Ramadan I am cutting out the bad foods, and snacking.
5. His habits consist of: Waking up early, Working out as hard as possible before fasting, Focussing on one singular task, and cutting out everything else until that task is finished.
6. He would time his progress on his work: for example
I have 1 hour to complete this sales page to the best of my abilities.
Can I do it faster? Can I sacrifice more time to make it better?
I may have this question misunderstood
7. Whenever he would run into ANY form of roadblock may it be Writersblock, an unknown, or just an overall question
He would first off identify his available resources, then take action on what he has available.
If he is still running into this problem he will ask an expert, or another student.

8. He would reach out to the millionaires he is friendly with and have more conversations with them, JUST so he could take everything he could out of the conversation.

He would try to have more conversation with his mothers clients whenever possible Mostly millionaires

He would reach out to his prior clients offering new ideas

He would identify the people he knows who own any kind of business, and present them an idea in the form of Free value, and eventually land them as a paying client.

9. He would prioritize competence: Competence in how much effort he is putting into his work, his workouts, his conversations and the way he is wording his sentences,

He would prioritize Competitiveness: He understands that business is hypercompetitive so he must adopt that trait or else he will eventually be running into a gunfight with a plastic spoon
AT BEST

10. He would find my lack of competence in my work repulsive, he would turn his head at the sight of the laziness going into my work.

He instead optimizes his copy to be the BEST piece of copy he can possibly make.. Using every resource he possibly can.
He also understands that if you are lazy in one metric it bleeds into the other metrics of your life.

He is obsessed with having complete control over the direction of his life:

He literally cannot sit still without accomplishing SOMETHING that he has planned out, he is obsessed with knowing what he is doing at all times, and doing it to his utmost abilities.

He is obsessed with becoming the best he possibly can at his skill.

Why? He understands that he will be WIPED out, forgotten, mistreated if he does not master every fundamental in his life, and gets his shit in order.

He understands that the longer he waits to get this completed the less time he'll have to escape before eternal slavery arrives.

Now let's start implementing one step at a time.