

CRAYGA

Name	Crayga
Also Known As	Commander Crayga of the 24th Regiment Scorpion (by comrades) Craygi (by Corra) Cray (by friends) Craynut (formerly by flightmates, derogatory)
Gender	Female (she/her)
Age	127
Born	Year 2889
Height	5.8m / 19'0

Element	Earth (green)
Element Mastery	Class Five (Experienced)
Magic Mastery	None
Occupation	Soldier (2913 - present) Student (2895 - 2913)
Rank	Commander (2971 - present) Lieutenant [Squire] (2935 - 2971) Lieutenant (2933 - 2933) Soldier [Infantry] (2913 - 2933)
Assignment	Second Division. 24th Regiment (2913 - present)
Status	Alive
Orientation	Bisexual
Social Status	Unified
Partner	Commander Kazahana
Affiliation	Warfang (citizen) Warfang Army Clan Everwinter (through unity)

The renowned commander of the 24th Regiment, Crayga is known for her rather unconventional approach to war and fearless attitude towards death by many.

For her family however, she's known as the eccentric mother and grandmother, a position she takes pride in. She's the unified of the Everwinter patriarch, Commander Kazahana.

Personality

Crayga is a passionate and feisty dragoness by all accounts, always one to speak her mind and care little for any consequences. She gets easily fired up and always has energy to let out, usually in a wrestling match or other forms of training, doing nothing or "relaxing" is a rare passtime for her, as she always prefers to be on the move and become stronger in the process.

Despite her supposedly tactless words, Crayga is far from stupid. She's smart, quick on her feet and rather cunning, all which she uses in her battle tactics and political tasks. She seems to hold some deviousness, which she often abuses when the moment calls for it. She likes to flirt with others, both in and outside of battle, make them flustered or lower their guard down, mostly for the fun and games of battle, which is why it's a tactic she often only uses for weaker opponents as she doesn't view them as a challenge, simply a game. With worthy opponents, Crayga gives it her all, and uses her cunningness more honorably to win.

Many call Crayga a madwoman due to her love for battle, the taste of blood in the air and the screams of agony do nothing to deter her, they only edge her on. She has no fear of war, nor death, and is known to challenge stronger opponents than herself in order to hone her skills - though she has never placed her troops in a fight she didn't think they could win. While unconventional tactics are needed in order to win a war, Crayga refuses to lay out intentional sacrifices and values the willpower and soul of every one of her soldiers.

Despite her eccentric and, at times, overdramatic behavior for her own amusement, Crayga will not accept disrespect and cowardice among her soldiers. She demands respect and teamwork between her troops, and will not hesitate to exact punishment when needed.

To those close to her, mainly her family, Crayga is rather protective. While she lets them have their fun, learn their own mistakes and encourages them to seek out challenges, the second someone touches her children she'll stop at nothing to have their heads plastered on a plate. Regardless, she's very motherly, albeit eccentric, which all her children suffer for. She loves embarrassing her kids with cuddles and hugs, telling them gore stories of war and death, and at times even being comedically dramatic for the hell of it, though she will not hesitate to punish them when needed or be strict. Either way, Crayga loves her children, and at times in their childhood even spoiled them, though that didn't mean she relieved expectations from them as Everwinters, and expected them to train hard.

She often appears to be carefree and easygoing, waving her problems off in exchange of something she finds "less boring" or "more fun", in truth, Crayga solves her problems quickly, and simply enjoys the reactions she gets from others at her behavior by pretending to act so carefree and eccentric. In her eyes, if someone wants to get close to her, they have to work for it and notice the small details in her actions and unspoken words.

Such fits, of seeing the small details, are second nature for Crayga. With an impressive tactical mind, she has proven to be smart and clever on many occasions, especially as a commander and a political ally. Finding the quirks, loopholes and problems in her enemies is a task she takes seriously, even if she doesn't show it, and enjoys the challenge of taking down her enemies no matter what it takes.

Crayga is loyal and faithful, even though she likes to flirt, not many can compare to her unified in her mind. Not only does she love him, she has utmost respect for him, and sees him both as a lover and a rival. She's often more "reigned in" when she's around her unified, preferring to watch him do the work, and seemingly enjoys how well he intimidates and dominates others. Her own brutal side often shows more around dragons she dislikes, mainly fony rich families who try to gain her favor by simply talking yet not acting. She detest cowards, and enjoys intimidating them on her own and watching them squirm under her glare.

Not many realize this, but Crayga cares very little for social status and social adequacy. She views individual strength and willpower, along with courage, as more important, though still values her duty and the importance of sacrifices for a clan, and expects the same of her family, even if she wishes they could bask in complete freedom from it.

History

Childhood (2889 - 2895)

Crayga's mother was born to a rich family of clanless earth dragons who used to live in Titan Fields selling various items as traders. However, as business started to grow bad, they contacted other families to help them, fearing the potential of losing their wealth. A richer family of meat traders and hunters, who were proud of their mixed ice/earth heritage, agreed to help them, provided they form an alliance through unity. Thus, her mother moved to Warfang Mainland near Scorchwell in order to unify into the ice/earth-mixed family.

From that unity, Crayga was born.

The mixed family had their claws in many professions, though the most prominent one was that of trading in meat and hunting, owning several lands where they raise and hunted animals to sell their meat and furs. On occasions, a family member would seek out a different profession than hunting or trading, which they would be permitted to do rather easily. Crayga's father, in particular, chose to remain as a soldier in the army. Her mother, however, remained as a trader.

When Crayga was born, her features didn't show much ice, but it was clear she was an energetic and strong child, and was encouraged to be outgoing and wild a lot. Her father wasn't around much, and her mother didn't seem particularly interesting, resulting in Crayga exploring and playing around. Upon exploring their grounds, under watch, Crayga often saw the hunters train and run around, pickijg her interest. She often tried copying them, "hunting" her cousins or trying to roughhouse with them. Even when she was scolded, her fire didn't sooth.

She wanted to fight.

Deciding to fight fire with fire, Crayga was allowed to play-train earlier than most, her parents hoping to tire herself out throughout the days. It proved to be somewhat effective, and by the time she was 6, it was time for her education to start. With her grandfather being the family's head, it was only natural for Crayga to be placed at the Warfang Temple for the rest of her childhood and adolescence.

Temple Years (2895 - 2913)

While not being from a clan herself, but still being rich and wealthy, Crayga was placed in a mixed flight with many clans, among them was the (presumed at the time) Everwinter heir; Kazahana. Despite her far lower political place, Crayga cared little for social antiques, always the type to seek out challenges and enjoy a good wrestle. Kazahana was a dragon from a clan of warriors and a giant in his own right, who would be a better challenge than him and his siblings? Any chance she got, Crayga would wrestle with the Everwinters, even before they started to study battle tactics.

The group soon formed bonds over their high spirits. The two who shared the strongest bond were Kazahana and Crayga, who often found it more interesting to engage in wrestling matches than listen to their Flight Master. They became such close friends, that when Kazahana discovered his element, purple ice, Crayga's reaction was to wheeze at him. Even that young, she knew Kazahana was from a mixed clan of ice and earth, and that purple ice was, supposedly, the "purest" form of ice. The odds were just insane, and she found it too funny. Regardless, she was happy for him.

It wasn't long before news of their friendship reached Crayga's parents, who were elevated. As a subordinate family to Everwinter, they saw this as a prime opportunity to offer a betrothal. Crayga, however, immediately refused, only 16 at the time and far too young to think of love. Granted, her parents cared little about her opinion, but Everwinter didn't yet agree either. The two were far too young, and Crayga was yet to display any real potential as a warrior.

Crayga wasn't sure whether or not Kazahana knew about the betrothal her parents tried to push for, but decided not to bring it up. She was friends with Kazahana because he was fun and because she liked him that way. He was her rival in arms, a challenge she sought to become stronger. She didn't want to unify with him, ew, too cheesy for her.

Instead of focusing on her parents' plans, Crayga put her attention on a sport a friend in the temple introduced her to - Boulder Toss. This sport quickly became Crayga's favorite, and even proved to aid her in her element training. Originally she played as the Sentinel, but eventually switched to a Warrior. By age 20, she was leading her own team, and was dragging her flightmates (Ampri, Kazahana and Ignitaros) into practicing with her and her team.

Despite her feelings as a teenager, as time went on, Crayga grew more attached to Kazahana. In fact, she had developed a crush on him by 20. While she was the bold type, this made Crayga pause. Did she really like him? Did he like her? She didn't want to ruin what they had by confessing to him and risking a rejection. Worse, she feared he would accuse her of becoming his friend only for "her parents' plans". Still, she couldn't stop her desire to be closer to him, and moreover, the strange tension that started to grow between them as time went on. This started to make things a bit awkward between them, especially during their wrestling matches, and Crayga was growing more and more frustrated.

At the time, she couldn't understand her feelings, but it would be in later years that she would realize, her frustration came out of dark desire during their spars.

The boiling point came when another dragoness had come up to Kazahana and started to flirt with him. At first, Crayga paid her no mind, why would she? She was just some hussy who held no real importance, even if she was from a clan. Still, as time went on, the damn hussy kept coming back, and eventually Crayga had enough. Walking up to Kazahana in the middle of his conversation with the clan dragoness, Crayga grabbed his head and kissed him with passion. After releasing him, she grinned, claiming he was hers, and walked away.

She was lucky it was the final period, since it gave her time to go home before Kazahana could chase after her and scream to her pillow. Far too many thoughts ran through her head throughout the day, many of whom were negative and dreadful, but her pride was the strongest. She was prepared to face Kazahana the next day, prepared for anything. Being naturally flirtatious, Crayga knew about her reputation at the temple, a flirt, a whore even, as more than once males attempted to claim she nested with them - all of whom received a beating afterwards to teach them a lesson. She didn't care about the rumors, about how Kazahana would react, she knew how she felt, and she was ready to make them officially mates, even if she'll have to do more to convince him that she was serious.

Finding out Kazahana had been waiting for her made her heart flutter, and she confessed her feelings, vowing with determination that she was serious about him. She was pleasantly surprised when Kazahana kissed her passionately in return, and let herself melt into it. From then on, the two started dating.

Joining the Army (2913 - 2933)

While she didn't have to go into service, due to the lack of the mandatory law at the time, Crayga was quick to choose to follow her mate into war. She was in love with Kazahana, and their service definitely didn't mean they were about to break up. No, they decided to stay together, and Crayga was set on proving her worth as a warrior. She knew that her family wanted her to unify into Everwinter, but she didn't care about them, she wanted to unify Kazahana. Granted, both knew they were too young, and Everwinter was a tough clan to please.

Crayga certainly liked a challenge.

After basic training was over, Crayga was placed in the 24th Regiment under the Second Division. At the time, the general in charge of the division was General Skogur, the Scion Aether patriarch, a dragon known for his cruelty and strength. Crayga held a lot of respect for him, much like many others, and grew to share some of his views on war through her commander and other soldiers.

Some of these views were further reinforced when, in 2921, the Dark Dragons were discovered to have lived in the Dark Lands, and terror blew throughout Warfang and its army. As the war began, dark dragons became a force to be reckoned with, and a terrifying one at that. Much like most soldiers, and civilians, Crayga grew to detest and hate darklings for their existence and horrifying elements. The only luck the army held was that, at the time, the war with the Dark Lands was small in comparison to that of the apes, and only small battles or border disputes occurred.

With the war not yet fully blown, yet war crimes being committed by the plentiful, some of what General Skogur allowed didn't seem right to Crayga, but she understood the frustration and hate many soldiers held towards their enemies. The war against the Dark Dragons was harsh and unforgiving, and it wasn't much better with the apes. While Crayga did try to do her best, even to the point of deterring other soldiers from performing unspeakable acts, she couldn't help but turn a blind eye on occasions, especially when orders were involved.

This didn't stop Crayga from following her goals, fighting alongside her comrades as an infantry soldier and growing stronger. On multiple occasions she has proven to be quick on her feet and think outside of the box. While this often resulted in praises, at times she went too far, and took control of squads, despite not being placed in charge of them. This did end up in punishment, despite the impressive results of such acts, much to her frustration. Crayga was never one to outright disobey orders, but she hated following plans that were, in her opinion, "bad".

This hindered her potential promotion to a degree, something she brought up with her commander. After a long talk, Crayga gained a lot of respect for her commander, and his squire, and decided to follow their example. From then on, Crayga chose her words more carefully, along with her actions. Yes, at times following orders wasn't the answer, but outright disobeying them wasn't the answer either. Learning to walk that line was something Crayga worked hard on.

She would later learn, after many years, that another reason for her late promotion was the lack of room for lieutenants within the regiment, but the commander didn't want to have her transfer to a different regiment, seeing far too much potential in her.

"The Scorpion Incident" (0000 - 0000)

During her prolonged service as a soldier, Crayga had gained a reputation as an eccentric dragoness, but it was only after a certain incident that she realized how accurate that reputation was. During a patrol at camp with a lieutenant, Crayga was stung by a scorpion. In her rage, she started to wrestle with the smaller animal throughout the camp before killing it. Despite the minor danger the situation held, with Crayga's derailed behavior, the other soldiers in the camp simply laughed.

From that day on, the incident was dubbed as "The Scorpion Incident" within the regiment and Crayga was nicknamed Scorpion. Her fellow comrades often teased her with the nickname, infuriating her positively. The higher in rank she would get, the more her comrades reminded her of the incident. The nickname spread so widely that once Crayga was given the command over the regiment, her lieutenants called her by the nickname for a full year.

New recruits who seek out glory and are unaware of the ways of the army assume that Crayga's nickname, "Scorpion", was given to her due to her reputation to use her tail to stab into her enemies. Crayga doesn't correct them, instead simply gives them a death glare, much to their confusion. It doesn't take long for them to understand why the lieutenants are laughing.

Rising in Ranks (2933 - 2971)

After 20 years of exemplary service, Crayga was promoted to the rank of a lieutenant, a rank she was fighting to gain for a long time, and was proud of having. A few years later however, a few platoons within her regiment were deployed into a mission. As unfortunate as it was, the commander's squire had died during the mission, and Crayga was chosen to take their place in 2935. Now a squire, to a senior commander no less, Crayga felt her position in the regiment to be secured enough to offer herself to Everwinter.

Having proven herself as a worthy warrior with powerful abilities and a good position, the Everwinter matriarch agreed to have her unify with Kazahana. Only a year later, in 2936 at age 45, Crayga and Kazahana unified. It wasn't long after that Crayga was pregnant as well, watching her firstborn hatching from his egg only 2 years after her unity in 2939.

Crayga was a good and loving mother, even before her first clutch was born, she used whatever time she had outside of deployment to talk with the eggs. Once they were born, Crayga often smothered her children with love, but didn't avoid punishments when it was needed. She was sadden to leave her hatchlings each time she had to go back, but took great pride in her work as a lieutenant, and often told them gore stories about the war.

After another 39 years of service, Crayga's commander decided it was time to retire, recommending Crayga to take his role to the division's general. With Everwinter backing her up with a recommendation as well, Crayga was soon chosen to become the next commander of the 24th regiment. This was one year after the Purple Egg was discovered and the full-scale war against the Dark Lands began. By this point, Kazahana was already the commander of the 19th regiment, having gotten the promotion 12 years before her. Being two commanders in the same division had more than just a few perks, and Warfang's enemies grew to fear joint operations between the regiments.

The Endless War (2971 - 3002)

The war was relentless and harsh, with resources being spread thin throughout the regiments in order to supply for the war between the Dark Lands and the apes. It wasn't long before General Lyreris started to expand the army in order to counter the issues, not that it did much to stop the war.

In 2294, Crayga was graced with some good news, her firstborn had another clutch of eggs. The water dragoness of which the contract was from was a dragoness Crayga rather liked, and occasionally suggested Isburdeus to take her as a unified. The fact that the clan kept setting up the two for contracts was certainly not a mistake, and when Crayga was given a chance to come see the eggs she couldn't help but wheeze.

A purple egg.

Shamelessly, Crayga told Kazahana that if that child ends up with purple ice, she'll go to Frostspear personally and laugh in their faces. It only took 3 years, extremely early for a hatchling, for Asmodeus to prove that he was in fact purple ice. And much like his grandfather before him, he was an aggressive child and already started his training, with his siblings joining him later on. Crayga loved them all equally, so much so that she wanted to try for another clutch with Kazahana.

Soon enough 3000 came, The Year of The Dragon, and many events took place. Her grandchildren started their temple studies, which Crayga felt smug about, considering the "wonder child" of Frostspear would start his temple studies as well. A child that could not look more impure and fitting for black ice, despite being white ice, a joke that must never be spoken publicly of course. Either way, he wasn't purple, and Crayga found it ironic. Her own children were also born in that year, and Crayga couldn't be happier that they were born in such a blessed year.

It was the first event of that year however, that put Crayga on edge. On the first day of the year the Purple Dragon hatched, an occasion Crayga had eagerly, and anxiously, waited for. She wasn't a fool, and was worried about the implications of the dragon's birth, especially in The Year of The Dragon. Their birth was too significant, if the vague prophecy surrounding them was any indication. Not to mention the discovery of their egg happened around the same time the war between Warfang and The Dark Lands began. Granted, the two events were separated, but Crayga had a bad gut feeling regarding it, and when the purple egg hatched, she decided to try and keep a close watch on Warfang and the Ancestors Temple.

Her worries soon proved to be realistic when a short while after the famous Commander Lynerius, the great Knighted Elemental, returned from the Dark Lands with a shadowling. Crayga found it surprising that the commander would take a child as a war trophy, even if darkling. It felt odd to her, and like many others, assumed he did so in order to study dark dragons. Still, were the prisoners of Sanctuary not enough for the young Stormbringer? The feud between Stormbringer and Frostspear was well-known, but surely Lynerius of all dragons would be able to get access to study any darklings he wished?

A New Era (3002 - present)

Finally, in 3002, the war against the Dark Lands had settled into a stalemate, and the Warfang Army shifted its full focus to the apes. Crayga couldn't have been happier. The apes weren't a better opponent, but she certainly preferred them over the dark dragons, whose elements were unpredictable and extremely vicious in battle. Not to mention that with only one focus, the Army's resources would be stretched so thinly and soldiers would be allowed more relief time outside of battle.

Years 3005 kindred mom dies Yulanis

Soon enough, Year 3006 came, and it was time for her youngest children to start their temple studies. Before letting them join, Crayga told the two to look out for The Purple Dragon. Crayga was aware he was set to study under the Elder Guardians themselves within the bounds of the Ancestors Temple, but he might visit regardless. She didn't like using her children as "spies", but it was a simple precaution just in case. It wasn't as though that was the reason they were given temple education either.

Crayga was most shocked, however, to hear that a Shadow Dragon would be studying in the temple. As a commander, Crayga has heard about Lynerius' "war spoils" he brought from the Dark Lands in the form of a shadowling, but she didn't think he would actually have it study in the Warfang Temple of all places. Regardless, she held respect for the Elemental Commander, and didn't see Hayze as a threat. He was a child. She had killed darklings far superior to him, and if the commander vouched for his behavior, she would simply make sure her or children would steer clear of the boy and leave him be.

When she discovered a young Frostspear was placed in the same Flight as the shadowling, a Clanless Flight no less, it wasn't hard to figure out what it was all about, and found it extremely amusing. She decided to keep an eye on that flight on occasions, and found it laughable when the young Frostspear, Vitreus, was attacked by the shadowling and received a scar as a result. The reason for the attack didn't concern her, Vitreus was not her child, and she would have never let her own child scar like the Frostspear have.

Besides, she had no doubt the shadowling was punished by its caretaker thoroughly.

Her reservations regarding the darkling still existed of course, despite its young age, but considering it had only ever attacked one child - a very likely spoiled Frostspear child at that - she didn't feel the need to voice her concerns. If anything, it all seemed pointless for her. What was Lynerius' point? To get the child a normal life? As a darkling in Warfang? She never saw the commander as an idealist until that point, but it still didn't feel right. It was as though he was ignoring the inevitable.

In Year 3008, another incident occurred, this one nearly broke Crayga's heart. She, along with her unified, failed to account for Asmodeus' aggressiveness and bloodlust, especially while juggling their respective duties as commanders and clan leaders, and parents. This left Asmodeus in the class of the Clan Elders, who sought to test his bloodlust and strength as a purple ice Everwinter.

At first, the elders brought the idea to the two, along with Isburdeus, as an "early assessment", claiming that Asmodeus could be a danger to himself and others. An assessment was made to all Everwinter in due time, but not at such a young age, especially when an assessment could only ruin him further, and the family was quick to refuse. In turn, the elders had schemed to create a situation where Asmodeus would be forced to act upon his wild nature.

By the end of the incident, Asmodeus had killed an 11 years old child from an unknown family, likely an orphan. Crayga was shocked by the finding of the investigation they sent out, but was quick to act. Together with Kazahana, they made sure to bury the evidence from the incident to protect Asmodeus and the clan, and the elders who were found involved were punished harshly. While worried, Crayga didn't view Asmodeus as a demon, she knew it was the ancient blood burning in his veins that made him so bloodthirsty. Still, as unintentional as it was, she became a bit distant from him, trying her hardest to think of a way to make it all better for him somehow.

Only a year later, in Year 3009, Asmodeus, now 15 and as bloodthirsty as ever, took the life of his second victim. The event took place on the night of the celebrations to the end of winter. Asmodeus and his sister, Neemais, left the celebrations hall together for some fresh air. The poor clanless, a 14 years old girl, decided to follow them for some reason. By the time a search was sent out to find the missing children, the poor girl and Neemais were both found dead. Asmodeus couldn't account for most of the night after he left the hall, his bloodlust made everything foggy and vague, but with traces of gem wolves, and their known actively in the area, the incident was reported as a tragedy to both families.

Despite what the clan might have thought, Crayga refused to believe Asmodeus took part in his sister's death, blaming it solely on the gem wolves and wildlife of the mountains, along with herself. She should have watched over them better, been there. She hugged Asmodeus that night, assuring him it would be alright, feeling a piece of her heart break.

In Year 3012 General Skogur died, making way for General Wysta to lead the Second Division in his stead. This was a welcomed change for Crayga, who grew tired of Skogur's needless cruelty towards Warfang's enemies and rather enjoyed the idea of a female general. In the short time of her lead, Wysta proved to be a strong general, and earned Crayga's respect.

In Year 3016 gemtailing incident with Isolfius :(((

Abilities

Element

Crayga was always referred to as a "spitfire" by her family, but the term was rather inaccurate for her, especially when it came to her element. Crayga always sought out challenges to help her grow stronger, being ambitious from a young age and aiming for high goals. Her element was not an exception, and Crayga took advantage of her family's resources, and later the Army's, in order to grow stronger. After years of dedication, fueled by a powerful motivation and strict training, along with experience on the battlefield as a soldier, Crayga reached Experienced mastery over her element at age 61.

While a powerful mastery, the-now commander still trains herself in order to reach higher mastery. Seeking out strength is an honorable act, and Crayga refuses to fall behind her duties as a commander.

Being born with Green Earth, Crayga's element is most proficient in natural flora manipulation. She's capable of using it to create vines, flowers and more, including sharp leaves for cutting and thorny whips. Crayga is known to enjoy bringing her enemies down and using her element to wrap a sturdy vine around their necks to crush their bones and windpipe as a killing blow.

Magic

Crayga has long forgotten any spells she learnt at the Warfang Temple.

Physical

Crayga is a strong Earth dragoness, befitting of her rank as a commander. After years of tonning her body for battle, she had become quite athletic, having a good balance between her speed and strength. She's taller than average, even for an Earth dragon and has very sharp growths on her body she often abuses in battle.

Family

Lord Cryogen (paternal grandfather, deceased)

Lady Corra (mother)

Lord Haylor (father, deceased)

??? (uncle, family's head)

Tierrais (youngest half-sister, ward)

Matriarch Yulanis (kindred-mother, deceased)

Commander Kazahana (unified, patriarch)

Commander Isburdeus (son, heir)

Lieutenant Kaedeis (daughter)

Scholar Isfridius (son)

Juniprys (unified of Isfridius)

??? (child)

??? (child)

Jorovar (youngest son)

Isolfius (youngest son)

Soldier Magnolis (oldest daughter of Isburdeus)

Soldier Isleifius (eldest son of Isburdeus)

Soldier Isbertius (son of Isburdeus)

Asmodeus (son of Isburdeus)

Aruna (daughter of Isburdeus)

Neemais (daughter of Isburdeus, deceased)

Nievaus (son of Isburdeus)

??? (youngest daughter of Isburdeus)

??? (youngest daughter of Isburdeus)

Other extended family

Relationships

Kazahana

Crayga's unified and unconditional lover. They have been sweethearts since age 20 and been through so many adventures together. Other than finding him to be incredibly handsome, Crayga finds him to be a dragon worthy of the title of both her rival and mate. His tactical mind, strength and devilish nature in battle had earned him her heart. He is her best friend and partner in everything, and she'll never tire of spending time with him.

She loves talking about him and “showing him off”, full of admiration and respect for the man she was lucky to find and unify.

Lord Haylor

Crayga cares very little about her father. During her childhood he was often distant and nonexistent, choosing to live his life fully for war, something she has grown to disapprove of, especially as a parent herself. After his injury, which resulted in his honorable release from service and lack of flight, Crayga came to pay her respect to his long service as a lieutenant. She also used the opportunity to let him know she will not tolerate his family using her name to gain more power, and certainly not Everwinter's name.

That was the last time she saw him before he succumbed to a sickness and a Wake was held in his honour.

Lady Corra

While Crayga cares for her mother a little more than her father, their relationship is rather strained. During her childhood, Corra was almost as distant as her father, and often tried to turn Crayga into a more "feminine" dragon like herself whenever she wasn't distant. As Crayga grew, she tried pushing for her to befriend Kazahana, and later, pushed for a unity. To this day, Crayga holds a grudge against her mother for using her as a pawn, even if it was unintentional.

Matriarch Yulanis

Having had a complicated relationship with her real parents ever since she was a child, Crayga grew rather attached to Yulanis, who welcomed Crayga into Clan Everwinter with open arms, especially after her unity with Kazahana. Yulanis, in Crayga's eyes, was a badass, powerful and wise leader and commander. She greatly admired her, enjoying her teachings and loved to spend time with her. By all accounts, she was a true mother to Crayga.

When the Ancestors called Yulanis to their realm, Crayga mourned her death gravely. She still misses her, and on especially hard days, visits her shrine for advice.

Lieutenant Rin

One of the best lieutenants Crayga had the honor of fighting alongside with. Despite being clanless, Crayga chose Rin as her new squire when her former squire retired in 2995. Rin had proven herself to be a reliable squire and friend, which made it all the worse when she fell in battle in 3002. Crayga took it upon herself to personally deliver the news to her unified, getting a chance to finally meet Rin's lover and her infant son. As much as it pained her, she was happy to have finally met them, even if that was their last meeting as well.

Squire Inazumael

Isburdeus' squire and likely the poorest soldier in the army, solely due to the amount of teasing he receives whenever Crayga meets him. Being her son's squire, she often teases him about "taking care" of Isburdeus' needs and talks about his physical strength.

General Undacus

Originally, back when Undacus was chosen to be the patriarch of Scion Aether in 3012, Crayga was concerned. The boy was far too young to be leading such a large and important clan, but at the very least he had his clan's Elders to support and guide him. When he was promoted to be a general however, Crayga grew angry. It took a few years for Crayga to come to terms with Undacus' position, but eventually she began to respect him. He was good at his job, and she had to give him at least a little credit, considering all the awful losses that surrounded his life even prior to his promotion.

With limited interactions with the general, as she was not directly related to his division, Crayga began to forget about the patriarch.

That was, until she found out her son had a crush on him. Crayga grew intrigued, and occasionally teases her son whenever the subject of the general is brought up. It wasn't until she realized Undacus' true effects on Isburdeus that she grew to view him in a different light. This wasn't some silly crush from her son, he genuinely held feelings for the water dragon.

After years of missing her son's smile, it was brought back thanks to Undacus.

Ampri

Daughter to the former Saryda patriarch and mother to the current patriarch, but more importantly, Crayga's childhood friend. The two met during their years of temple education after being placed in the same Flight together, and quickly bonded. Their friendship held strong long after leaving for mandatory service, especially when Crayga unified into Everwinter and took an active part in strengthening relationships between Saryda and Everwinter.

In 3011 a terrible incident occurred within the Saryda Clan and Ampri was tragically killed along with the former patriarch and other members of the clan. Due to her closeness to Ampri, Crayga was given the details of the incident, but was sworn to secrecy. Devastated, Crayga mourned her friend for a long time.

Tierrais

Crayga loves her younger half-sister, even if the circumstances surrounding her birth were less than ideal. Throughout her childhood Crayga had to alternate between raising her like a daughter and raising her like a sister - both of which had their ups and downs (but thankful she always had Kazahana by her side). She refuses to tell her who her real father is, knowing it'll only bring her further frustration. She wants Tierrais to focus on her future, not her past.

Trivia

- Inspired by Queen Tara from Epic (2013).

- Despite her grandfather being of an Ice element, Crayga was named after him in an Earth variation of the name.
- Back during her years in the temple, Crayga was known to favor the sport of Boulder Toss. After her departure to the army, she didn't have much time to spend on the sport anymore. However, to this day, Crayga still catches up on official games as a hobby.
- As a teenager and young adult, Crayga often snuck out and into Remembrance Eve celebrations held by "commoners" within the city. She often dragged her friends and unified (mate, at the time) alike, and has grown to encourage her children and grandchildren to do the same. Once they're older and are needed for their clan duties they can join the boring, high-class parties. Until then, they should have fun as kids.

Gallery

Full ref

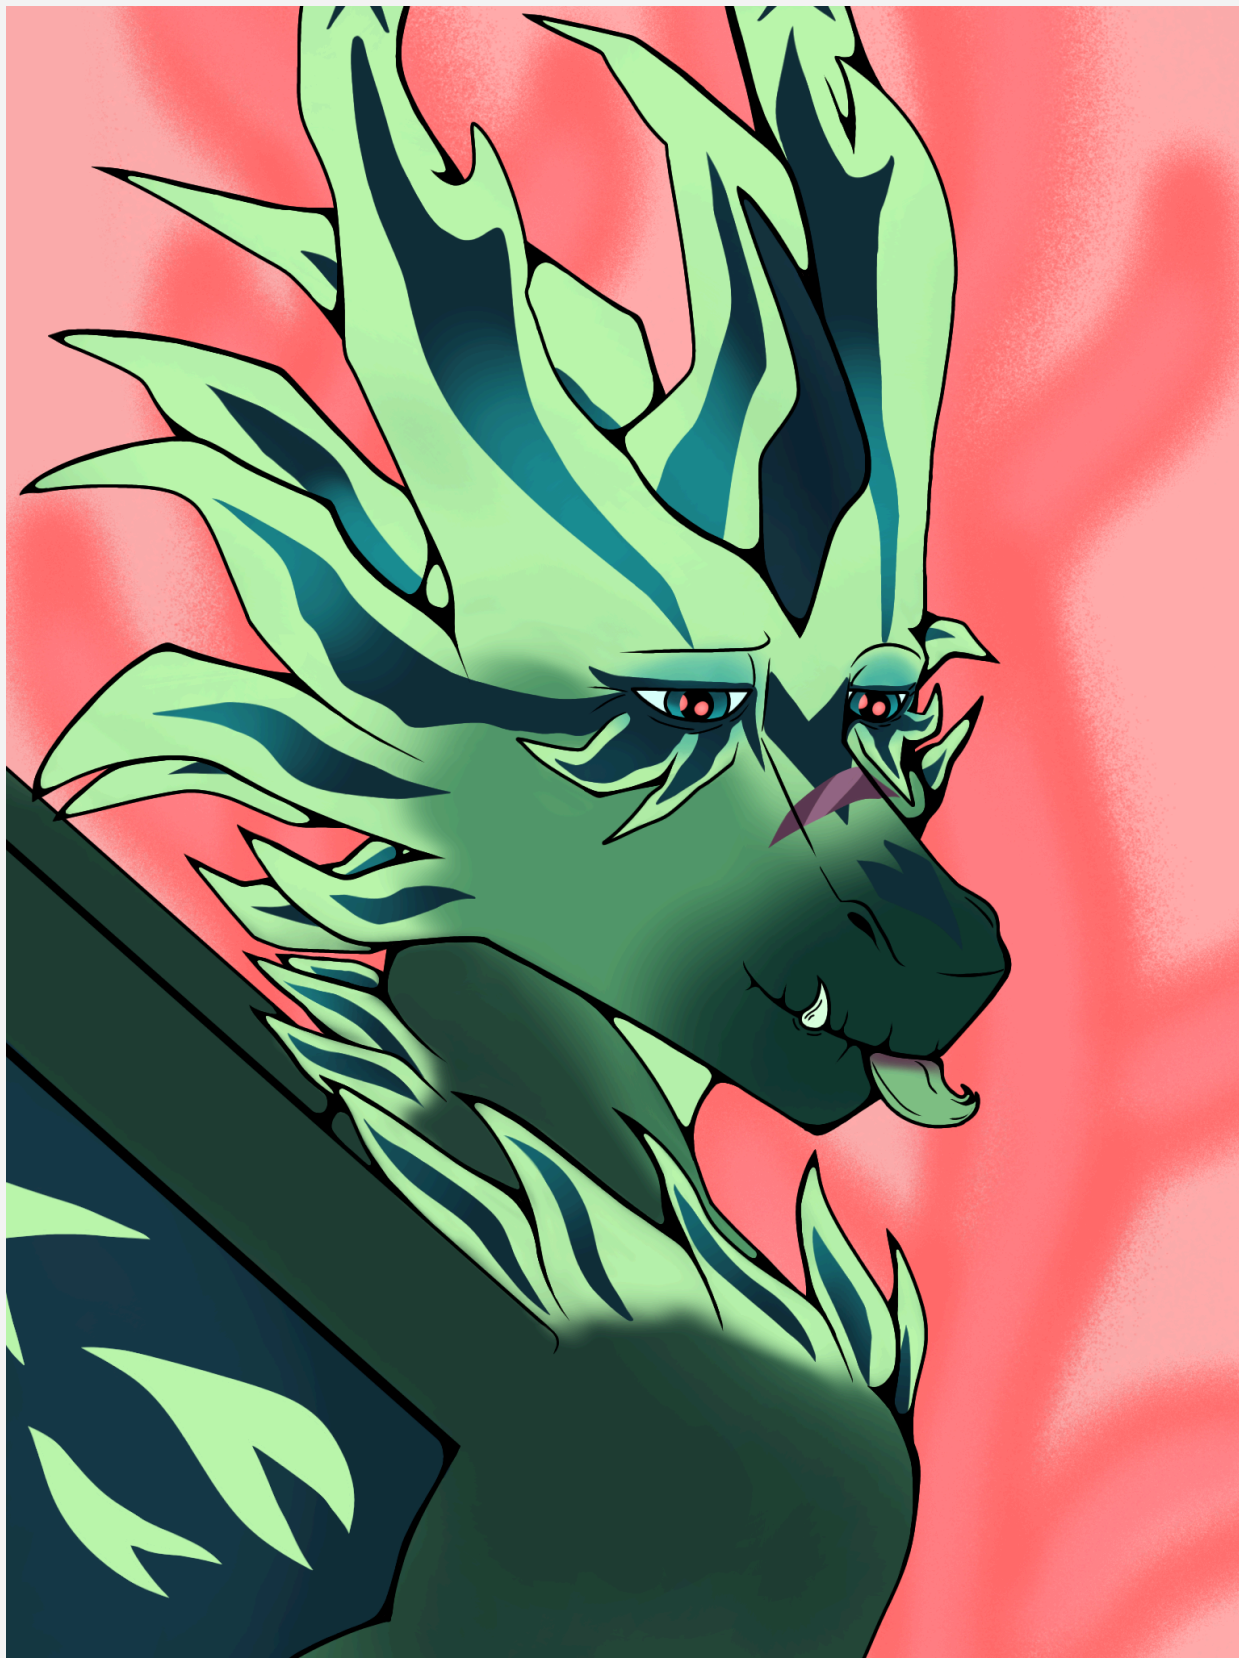

Full ref (no scars/young)

Crayga ceremonial armor (by Rail of Light)

Crayga unity attire (by @ConfortExpress)

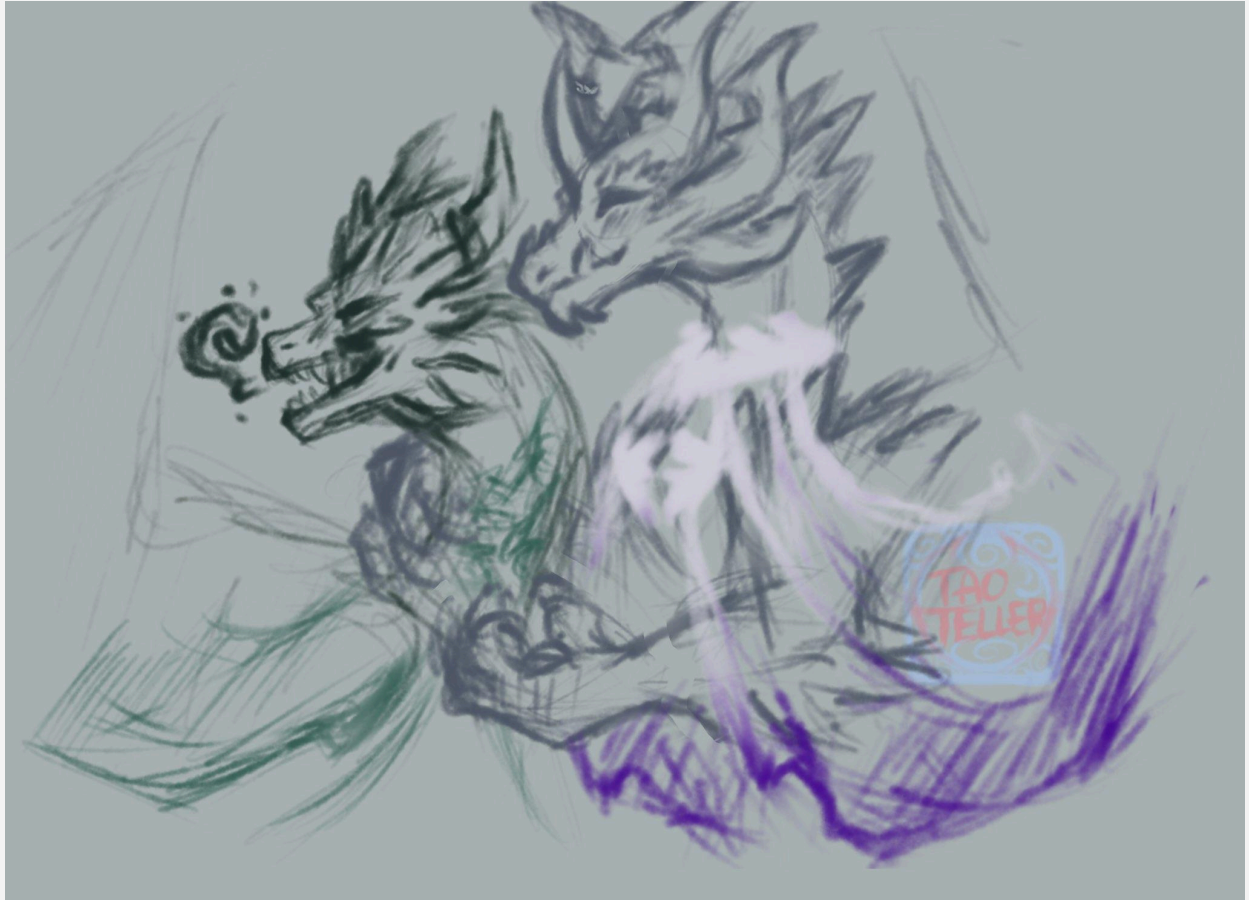

Art by @Hunter

Art by Creative.Art.Attack

Art by Seneca

Art by TaoTeller

Art by Star-burner

Credit

Character by Rollo

Design by Constelia