Definition

"Bribe" means property or other benefits given to a person to induce them to perform or refrain from performing any act in their official capacity, whether such act is lawful or unlawful, as desired by the payer. This includes gifts, tokens of goodwill, donations, entertainment, and similar benefits offered, given, or received in a manner that can be reasonably considered a bribe. It also includes gifts given or received after the fact. (Receiving gifts in the performance of official duties differs from receiving gifts in a morally acceptable manner, which refers to accepting property or other benefits that can be calculated in monetary terms from individuals on special occasions, festivals, or holidays. Therefore, receiving gifts, tokens, or gratuities in the performance of official duties may constitute bribery

"Performing duties" means the actions or performance of duties of a government official in the appointed position or has been assigned to perform any duties or to act instead in any one role Both in general and specifically as a police officer as required by law. Measures to protect complainants/whistleblowers/ witnesses and Confidentiality

1. When handling complaints, the level of confidentiality and protection of those involved must be determined in accordance with the Regulations on the Protection of Official Secrets B.E. 2544 (2001). When referring matters to the relevant agency for consideration, both the informant and the complainant may suffer hardship. For example, complaints alleging wrongdoing by a government official should initially be considered confidential. Anonymous complaints should only be considered if they provide clear evidence, circumstantial evidence, and specific witnesses. Reports of influential individuals must conceal the name and address of the complainant. If the complainant's name and address are not concealed, the relevant agency must be notified and provide protection as follows: "The superior officer shall use their discretion to appropriately protect the complainant, witnesses, and individuals providing information in the investigation from any harm or injustice that may arise from the complaint, testimony, or information provision." If the accused is named, both the complainant and the accused must be protected because the matter has not yet undergone fact-finding and may be considered malicious accusations causing harm and damage. Furthermore, if the complainant requests confidentiality or anonymity in their complaint, the agency must not disclose the complainant's name to the accused agency, as this may cause harm to the complainant based on the allegations.

When reporting information about influential individuals, the name and address of the informant must be kept confidential. If the name and address of the informant are not concealed, the relevant agencies must be notified and provide protection to the informant as follows: "The commanding officer shall use their discretion to issue appropriate orders to protect the informant, witnesses, and individuals providing information in the investigation from harm or injustice that may arise from the complaint, testimony, or information provided." If the name of the accused is specified, both the informant and the accused must be protected because the matter has not yet undergone a fact-finding process and may be a malicious accusation causing distress and damage. Furthermore, if the informant requests that their name be kept confidential or does not wish to have it disclosed, the agency must not disclose the informant's name to the accused agency, as the informant may suffer harm as a result of the complaint.

2. When there is a complaint The complainant and witnesses will not be subject to any action that affects their work or livelihood. If any action is necessary, such as separating the workplace to prevent the complainant from being a witness. and the accused meeting together, etc., must have the consent of the petitioner and witnesses.

3. Requests from the injured party, the complainant, or witnesses, such as a request to move a place of work. or methods for preventing or solving problems Should be considered by responsible persons or agencies as appropriate.

4. Provide protection to the complainant from being harassed.
