Elurra is the elusive 'Snowsong' of clan Hailscale— one whose voice and gaze has been described as a haunting allure.

Personality

To many, she is an utmost desire. The sequins of her dress dance under the spotlight, yet her form is almost colorless save for the scarlet of her eyes. Her tone is demure. Coy. The perfect blend of temptation to the right faces in the crowd. And just as soon as the gentle caress of her voice beckons for all the lounge patrons of their most undivided attention, her performance ends, and she disappears behind the curtains.

To some, she is a chilling presence. Not at all aggressive or hateful, but not one made for long conversation. Her rare comments can come off as blunt or dry sarcasm. She holds a morbid fascination for the dead, and on mornings blanketed with fog, it is as though she is a spirit that walks amongst the living.

But to the very, very few...

She is a lonely woman in an ever increasingly isolating world.

History

Backstory

Even before birth, Elurra had already experienced the loss of a parent. She was the surviving egg of her mother's first and only clutch, as complications during delivery resulted in a fatal egg binding that a cesarean could not alleviate. Her father, struck with grief, found it difficult to leave the nesting grotto, and upon her hatching would keep her close to his side. A relatively quiet infant; he would often fear that she ceased to breathe in her sleep were it not for the soft rise and fall of her little chest.

The circumstances of her birth and her monochromatic appearance made for Elurra to be considered unusual amongst Hailscale. The most spiritual or superstitious members dubbed her a 'walking spirit,' a name not meant with any harm yet one her father regarded with contempt. It was not without reason; Elurra would seem to appear and disappear in the estate's halls, rosy red eyes piercing in the dark. However, she was easier to be heard. The dragoness discovered her love for song early, and her father happily provided everything she needed to nurture her passion.

For many years she would be found out in the estate's gardens singing with her father, who would bounce his hand to the rhythm as her personal conductor. There was no sweeter melody to the man than the sound of his daughter's voice: well versed, spirited, and alive.

And true to tradition, Elurra would continue to sing by her father's graveside for years to come.

Though somewhat lacking in physical and elemental strength, she came to be useful to Hailscale in voice. Her talents soared, her stages ranging from small venues to lavish, large parties amongst Warfang's highest elite. Elurra earned her coin well, even if it meant at the sacrifice of her comfort. For every public festivity was a private lounge and the hungry, predatory eyes amongst the audience were always difficult to ignore. But it mattered not. She had her bodyguards, she had her clan's utmost supervision, and she had her claws and teeth. She stomached the leering, and gave them the untouchable allure they came for.

The nation of Warfang harbors its own fair share of celebrities. And from notable heirs, the elemental, decorated champions, and so on, Elurra has managed to etch her name amongst them as one of the more lesser known, yet memorable. Her ballads, deeply rooted in love and sorrows, resonate well with the populace gripped by the throes of unrequited romance and the loss felt of ever present war. But she also retained a more humble side, as she is not opposed to elegies for the dearly departed at per her request.

3015 - Present Day

Elurra's struggles were not limited with death, as the loss of a couple of relationships piled upon each other. Her introversion and loneliness led to desperation. However, potential partners were either married off or, more recently, running off with another woman. After her shows, she found herself almost always lingering by the bar just far enough to be hidden away yet still surrounded by the sights and sounds of the lounge. Home was far too cold and far too quiet.

Not one for alcohol and its effects, she always tended to temper her sorrows with something sweet.

Abilities

Element

Elurra's element is a smokey White Ice, discovered at the age of 6. She has not been compelled to try any other mastery beyond Controlled. She does use it during her performances, however, to shower the stage in a small flurry of glittering snow crystals.

Magic

Any magic learned in her Flight years had been long forgotten.

Physical

Elurra is of a petite build, coming to a shorter than average height for her age. She appears to be fairly lean in muscle and delicately toned, but her grip is surprisingly strong; of which others murmur that she takes some training in physical self defense.

Trivia

- Elurra's design takes on arctic foxes and snow hares. The spikes that adorn her head give her the silhouette of a fluffy mammal. Her horns also point inwards into the shape of a heart.
- The dragoness's concept as a whole harkens back to 1940s film noir. She is modeled after the femme fatale media trope through her makeup-like markings and sequin attire.
- Singing voice (and general voice claim) is comparable to the following:
 - Sydney by Caravan Palace
