In the legal profession, no matter how independent American lawyers are, they still need to abide by certain protocols and practices according to a Colorado Supreme Court justice and they should in no way become blind when it comes to the case at hand. Every lawyer is subject to the concept of attorney independence even if most people will consider trial lawyers for this particular element. Your clients should be able to get objective, sound legal advice from you as their lawyer regardless of the kind of legal professional that you are.

There are two things to think about when it comes to lawyer independence. Aside from having a duty to the client, the lawyer cannot be controlled by others. Aside from government issues, self-interest, and public opinion, a lawyer can work for other clients too.

A lawyer's duty to the client is easily marred because of another duty which is to the legal system. In the case of the legal profession, you cannot have only one of these. This is actually a reason for much lawyer stress. For a lawyer, he or she can only act independently on behalf of the client and not be the client.

Lawyers are only intermediaries. In no way can a person's conscience be shared. What makes a lawyer independent is having the ability to follow the rule of law.

When needed, it is the job of a lawyer to provide the client with objective advice about any case apart from helping the client within the framework of the law. Working for the best interest of the client, a lawyer should solve legal problems and try to keep the client out of court if possible.

In terms of the political or unpopular cases, these are often handled by the independent lawyers. You can expect the general public to be hostile when it comes to the criminal defense bar. The legal profession is suffering because of this.

What you need to do is address another thing here. What you have here is a business and a profession at the same time but nowadays, the legal profession is becoming more of a business rather than remaining to be a simple profession. Besides going into business with their clients, lawyers also have the option of putting dot.com e-businesses to good use.

Other factors include exorbitant legal fees, lawyer advertising creating the impression a law practice is a business and not a profession, a belief that the law is complex and lawyers spend most of their time in arcane paper shuffling, and the pressure to include lawyers in multidisciplinary practices. There are more concerns because of the culture of law itself. In this case, there is no sense of normalcy when it comes to living for the day is spent on the extremely long work hours.

In this profession, change should be welcomed and this is how you prevent the core values from being compromised. What the people here want to do is progress without changing and this is where some of the difficulties will arise on your part. If you want change to be a good thing, see to it that the functions of independence and client confidentiality will remain.
