

Jada Young - Communicating at Work

Strengths in Written vs. Spoken Communication

Jada: I definitely excel in writing. That's more just where I can just express who I am easier. My disability is only verbal. It's hard with mine, because even if you just worked in an office and just was on a computer all day and typed everything out, there would be times where I'd have to speak. And if I was around in a hospital and moving around in that high-paced environment, I'd have to speak.

Navigating Career Paths and Future Options

For my disability, I think from the way I'm looking at it, I don't know if a career path outweighs another one in the way that in all of them, you're going to have to speak or be in a meeting or talk to other employees, and things like that. So I'm having options, I guess. But I am open to just hearing and exploring more.
