What Our Grade 6 Scholars Are Working On in ELA

- Central idea: Identifying the main message or idea and explaining how details support it.
- Author's point of view: Recognizing what an author thinks, believes, or feels about a topic and how the text reveals that perspective.
- Analyzing key components of a text: Explaining how important parts of a text contribute or help build its meaning.

YOU CAN: talk about what your child is reading. After a short section, ask, "What is the most important idea here?" Then ask, "Which details helped you figure that out?" Encourage your child to show you the evidence in the text.

YOU CAN: be a reading detective with your child. When your child is reading something, ask, "What does the author think about this topic? Which words give you clues?"

YOU CAN: turn screen time into thinking time! While watching a reel, video, show, or movie together, ask, "What is the main message?" "What does the creator want you to think?" or "What did you see or hear that supports your thinking?"

You do not need to have every answer. Asking questions, listening, and encouraging your child to return to the text can make a difference.

What Our Grade 6 Scholars Are Working On in ELA

- Central idea: Identifying the main message or idea and explaining how details support it.
- Author's point of view: Recognizing what an author thinks, believes, or feels about a topic and how the text reveals that perspective.
- Analyzing key components of a text: Explaining how important parts of a text contribute or help build its meaning.

YOU CAN: talk about what your child is reading. After a short section, ask, "What is the most important idea here?" Then ask, "Which details helped you figure that out?" Encourage your child to show you the evidence in the text.

YOU CAN: be a reading detective with your child. When your child is reading something, ask, "What does the author think about this topic? Which words give you clues?"

YOU CAN: turn screen time into thinking time! While watching a reel, video, show, or movie together, ask, "What is the main message?" "What does the creator want you to think?" or "What did you see or hear that supports your thinking?"

You do not need to have every answer. Asking questions, listening, and encouraging your child to return to the text can make a difference.