Sano Manjiro, a lively young man with a strong will and the stubbornness of a bull. Driven by his passion to create a new era for delinquents after being inspired by his eldest brother, Shinichiro, he strives to do just that every day. Confident in his abilities as he's never lost, Mikey carries himself quite high and is oftentimes a rather personable individual. This has led him to have quite the following, taking on the role of a leader within his circle of friends. Loyalty is something he values and expects from those around him, in turn gaining his undying loyalty as well. Carrying the burdens of others for him as well as his own, he still holds a smile and assures those he loves that he will forever protect them. That being said, he's rather childish when nothing serious occurs, throwing "fits" over the smallest things that play into his shorter temper. Somewhat quick to violence, he has no problem beating someone to get his point across and this can cause problems. His morality is extremely gray and he finds himself relying on those around him to steer him down the correct path as he struggles to do it himself. Not the most empathetic of people, he says or does things at the wrong time without realizing that it was a poor moment to do such a thing. Crying is something he despises, considering it to be a weak action that only weak people do so he does his best to push back from such emotional reactions. He's a far more logical person than he leads on and is extremely perceptive, picking up on things before he's ever told them, i.e. when he realized that Takemichi was a time leaper. A darkness lurks within him due to circumstances outside of his control and clings to him like a vice, unshakable as it slowly consumes him. His mental state is more fragile than he lets on and as such is easily manipulable, capable of falling further down the path of darkness without much restraint.

SANO MICHAEL

SANO MANJIRO › | WRITING EX. HOME BASICS PERSONALITY CONNECTIONS EXTRA

Mikey always found solace within rainstorms, the pattering of water against the glass windows making up the top floor belonging to the executives headquarters enjoyable. Less could be said about the men inside it, of course, blood feeling the same as soapy water on their hands by now. It was easy to stumble down the wrong path, even easier to be led down it by those trusted and Mikey was guilty of that 100 times over. Keeping everyone at both arms and legs length was the best way to ensure safety for those closest to him as a result. The pain meant little as long as they survived— or so he told himself.

With the separation came its own set of difficulties and Mikey found himself yearning to be with his old friends again. He couldn't— he knew that— but with the most recent chain of events all due to a simple group chat made by who-fucking-knows his self restraint was wearing thin. If it weren't for his faithful right hand keeping him in check he's sure he would have broken by now, trying to apologize and return to how it was before. Though, it didn't keep him from cracking every once in a while, responding to messages that he definitely shouldn't be even acknowledging— like now.

Who would have thought that repressed feelings and longing glances from over 10 years ago would be finally surfacing? Mikey didn't. From a drunk kiss to an attempt at both his own and Takemichi's life to now this; "It's just that I wish that something would have worked out between us". His body was up and moving before he could fully process what had been admitted, steps hurried as he took the elevator down to the garage. He'd rather deal with some nagging later about why he left without saying anything than miss this opportunity to do something, anything. Key twisting into its designated spot, his Babu purred to life with only a little bit of sputtering. He'd get it fixed another time.

There was nothing in the world that could have stopped the criminal in that moment, thoughts racing through his head as his bike did through the streets. Running traffic signals and hitting at least 20 over the speed limit, he maneuvered effectively through them. Adrenaline coursed through his veins and his fingers clutched onto the handlebars a little bit tighter than normal, compensating for the way that he was rapidly becoming soaked by the downpour of rain. A single glance at the location Takemitchy was at beforehand and he had known where to go. He could find his way there in his sleep and that held evident with the ways he was cutting through some alleyways to get there as quickly as possible. His tires screeched to a halt the moment he was in front of the old shrine and he barely managed to push his kickstand down before he was going up those slippery steps.

Manjiro was desperate, hopeful, and anxious all at once. This was the most emotion he'd felt all at once in a long time— save for the racing, he supposed— and it practically made him nauseous. For the first time in 12 years he wanted to have his cake and eat it too; he wanted Takemitchy to be happy with him. His lungs screamed for air and he could almost feel the need for tears to spill, but neither would stop him. Footsteps growing closer, he gasped for air as he reached the final step as if it had been ages since his last breath and truthfully, it felt like it had been. Takemitchy was a breath of fresh air in an otherwise cruel and bloody world that he'd been living in for over a decade now. Something in him felt just a little more complete, a bit less dangerous and a bit more kind when he was around the other.

Dark eyes landed on black hair and Manjiro paused, his body refusing to take another step as he was unsure of what to say or do. His chest heaved and his form trembled, though almost unnoticeably so. Lips parted to say something, perhaps ask him if he was lying, but the only thing that came through was arguably his favorite word instead.

"Takemitchy."
