DESCRIPTION

With his imposing, rugged exterior, and a permanent scowl etched into his face, it's easy to mistake Godfrey for nothing more than a terrifying ruffian. He's brash (many would even say he's a bossy control freak), and is blunt with his words regardless of how hurtful they may be. Growing up in an environment that glorifies toxic masculinity has shaped him into a very private person who despises talking about himself - or worse - his feelings.

Godfrey's past is a tangled mess of many unresolved trauma and issues which remains unaddressed because he doesn't believe in therapy. (...) He is irreverent and impulsive as he tries to cope unhealthily from his past, resulting in him being prone to crashing out, and always chasing the worldly desires to forget his pain.

Despite it all, a flicker of the man he once was still lingers beneath the surface. Deep down, Godfrey remains an astute man who is deeply committed to justice, reliable [REDACTED], and is always eager to help those in need. He has always been fiercely loyal to people he holds dearly, though it is hard for him to open his heart after what happened. [REDACTED]

BACKGROUND

TLDR: After surviving severe foster care abuse, Godfrey and Gilbert were rescued by a retired cop, who later on adopted the twins as his own. Both pursued law enforcement careers and managed to graduate as police officers despite the obstacles they faced. Many years passed and the twins were content to live a mundane life. Unfortunately, their blissful lives were shattered when their adoptive father passed away so suddenly. Though he was elderly, his death was still a huge blow to the twins, especially Gilbert. Ever since then, Gilbert became increasingly obsessed with “aberrations” and grew apart from his twin brother. When communication fails to work - Godfrey resorted to stalking his twin into the woods after work, in hope to discover what his brother was up to. This led to a violent angel encounter that cost Godfrey his right forearm and Gilbert his life. In the end, the authorities dismissed the incident as a wild bear attack, leaving Godfrey to spiral into self-doubt and self-destruction. His life became a blur of odd jobs and unhealthy coping mechanisms, each day passing in a haze.

Though he never imagined anyone (or anything, really) would care enough to offer him a second chance. But months later, much to his surprise, he received a knock at his door and a job offer (that he doesn't recall applying for?) he ABSOLUTELY couldn't refuse.

“Fuck. Antarctica!? Did I apply for this job when I was drunk or something?? Fuck.”
