Basic Information About the Course:

Estimated number of hours of study per week: 9-12 (more if you are a slow reader)

This course is authorized through the College Board AP Audit process, meeting all curricular guidelines. Homeschool students completing this course will be authorized to use the AP designation on their official high school transcript. Families need to secure a testing site for the AP Exam on their own at a local school. The AP exam is separate from this course. You will receive a final grade after the course concludes in May. If the student takes the exam, the official AP exam score comes directly from the College Board, typically in July.

This course is best suited for juniors and seniors (although some sophomores have also taken this course with great success) who have some experience with analytical writing - that is, with writing that makes arguments based on evidence. For example, if you have taken a challenging English literature course where you were required to show the development of a theme in some piece of literature, or to make some other sort of argument with references to the literature to back up your argument, then you have had experience in analytical writing. If you have had history courses where you have read primary documents (that is, speeches, or letters, or essays, etc. written by people in the past) and where you need to show a deep understanding of what is going on in the primary documents, that also involves analytical writing. I have had students without this sort of experience do well in the course before, but typically, students encountering this sort of work tend to have a much steeper learning curve.

There are five parts to this application. Please remember to include all five parts, either as attachments in an email, or all mailed together in a single envelope to the address listed above. If you have any questions, please email me at the email address listed above.

1. A sample, or excerpt of a sample, of a writing assignment. Please include at least the first two pages from a previous writing assignment. My preference would be to see a paper that analyzes some piece of literature and makes specific references (quotes and/or paraphrases) to the literary piece to back up what you are saying. If you happen to have a history paper that analyzes primary documents (that is, writings from the time period studied), that would be great. If you don't have either of those, simply submit your best example of non-creative writing.

2. A short ‘introductory’ essay (200-400 words) about yourself that reflects not only your best writing, but also your personality. You may include what areas of history you’ve already studied and what eras or individuals interest you the most. You can tell me about your favorite books or favorite sites. You can tell me about issues or activities that mean a great deal to you. You can tell me about your strengths, weaknesses, and quirks.

3. Completion of the following chart. You can type your information directly into the form or you can print this out and fill in the information.

4. Completion of a short analytical exercise, below the chart.

5. Terms of Participation, which require student and parental signature (typed-in 'signature' is fine).

[Please note that if you do have unusual circumstances, this will not typically disqualify you from consideration for the course. I’ve taught students under all kinds of circumstances. I just need as much information up front as possible.]

Short Analytical Exercise

Read the following two documents written just before the start of WWI (1914).

- 1. In two or three sentences, explain the main ideas of Document 1.
- 2. In two or three sentences, explain the main ideas of Document 2.
- 3. In a short paragraph, compare/contrast the two perspectives in what they each believe about which group was the most responsible for starting WWI. Avoid direct quotes. (Compare/contrast involves not only differences, but similarities.)

Document 1: Henri Massis and Alfred de Tarde

“Consider something even more significant. The most cultivated elite young people declare that they find warfare an aesthetic ideal of energy and strength. They believe that ‘France needs heroism in order to live.’ How many times in the last two years have we heard: ‘Better war than this eternal waiting!’ There is no bitterness in this, but rather a secret hope. War! The word has taken on a sudden glamor. It is a youthful word, wholly new, adorned with that seduction which the eternal aggressive instinct has revived in the hearts of men. These young men imagine war to have all the beauty with which they are in love and of which they have been deprived by ordinary life. Above all, war in their eyes, is the occasion for the most noble of human virtues.... For such men, fired by patriotic faith and the cult of military virtues, only the occasion for heroism is lacking.”

Document 2: Jules Cambon, “The debate about the financial means by which Germany intends to pay for these new military measures is the sole cause of the government’s delay in proposing the measures to the legislature. In spite of the patriotism with which the rich classes pretend to accept the sacrifices asked of them, they are none the less dissatisfied with the financial measures which have been announced, and they feel that a new tax imposed in times of peace creates a dangerous precedent for the future. [As a result of these concerns], the Imperial German government is constantly rousing patriotic sentiment. Every day Kaiser Wilhelm delights to revive memories of 1813[note – Germany had finally beaten France under Napoleon at this time]. Yesterday evening a military parade went through the streets of Berlin, and speeches were delivered in which the present situation was compared to that of a hundred years ago. The trend of public opinion will find an echo in the speeches which will be delivered next month in the Reichstag, [note – this is the name of the German legislature] and I fear that the German Chancellor himself will be forced to allude in his statements to the relations of France and Germany.”
