What is Hue Royal Refined Music

Hue Royal Refined Music or Nha Nhạc Cung Đình Hue means "elegant music of the Hue royalty" in Vietnamese. In royal events, this performing art usually appeared at the opening and closing ceremonies. Its orchestra includes musicians wearing ao dai and turban who play traditional instruments like the erhu, flute, and 16-string zither, etc.

Back in the 19th century, this genre was considered the national music because it showed the royal dynasty's influence in every aspect of life. Interestingly, despite the word "royal" in its name, this genre was prevalent among both aristocrats and commoners.

History of Hue Royal Refined Music

Hue Royal Refined Music first appeared in the Ly Dynasty (1010-1225) but was officially performed during the Le Dynasty (1427-1788). However, it was not until the Nguyen Dynasty (1802- 1945) that Hue Royal Refined Music reached its peak and became a symbolic form of music in Vietnamese royalty. The Nguyen kings classified it into seven types and each became an indispensable part of a specific ritual.

For instance, Te Giao is for offering worship to Earth and Heaven while Dai Trieu Nhạc is for special occasions or welcome ceremonies. In 2003, Hue Royal Refined Music was recognized by UNESCO as a Masterpiece of Oral and Intangible Heritage. At present, it has been introduced to the world and has a strong reputation for its uniqueness.

Conclusion on Hue Royal Refined Music

Distinctive and historic as it is, Hue Royal Refined Music is a form of art that you will not find anywhere else. In comparison with catchy and vibrant songs on music charts, Hue Royal Refined Music might seem outdated and unattractive. But once you sense the serene ambiance of Hue City, you will feel the music's power even without understanding a single word.
