

Mincoder makes a last day campaigning push

It is the last day of campaigning. It can be felt in the air of Charlotte. The last day of campaigning is beginning where it all started. A large crowd has gathered. Once again a podium has been set up for Mincoder. She walks up onto the podium. In addition to the old campaign signs, a new sign has been handed out to members of the crowd from volunteers:

PROMOTE AND PROTECT AMERICAN BUSINESSES
MINCODER FOR CH-3

Mincoder started to talk:

"Chesapeake! I would like to thank all of you for being with me all this time. This has been a grueling campaign. We have been knocking doors together. We have been through a lot together in our fight against socialism and for American freedom.

This is a fight between the state and the people. We republicans believe that the people should be the driving force in America. The people shall be promoted in starting small businesses. These businesses will blossom and drive America forward. It is the small businessman in Tennessee, the waitress in South Carolina and the farmer in North Carolina that drive this nation forward. Not the bureaucrats in Washington. And that is the fundamental difference, Republicans believe in people, not government, Socialists do the opposite.

I will push for legislation to help small business owners in America. Corporate taxes are far too high right now. They force many small time business owners out of business. By lowering corporate taxes we will give small businesses breathing room. We will allow them to employ new employees. These small businesses will be at the forefront of American innovation. They are what build America and the American dream.

I will also push for legislation to create microloan programs. Small loans for individuals willing to start new businesses. This way we can help ordinary Americans realise the American dream. We can give them the funds necessary to start up the small businesses that will be at the forefront of American innovation and business.

I hope also to push forward legislation to help American businesses become carbon free. This will be done by creating tax reductions for anti-carbon technology. Many businesses, especially small ones simply do not have the economic resources to go green. By creating deduction we can ensure that they do have the economic resources necessary. American businesses will be able to for example invest in carbon capture technology. Carbon capture is one of the most effective technologies for reducing carbon emissions.

On the same track I will work to establish deductions for private citizens when it comes to solar panels. People should not be held back from investing in solar energy because they are paying that money in tax instead. By decentralising and decarbonising energy we will both lower our dangerously high emissions but also make our electrical grid more reliable. It is really a win-win situation.

Speaking of taxes. Of course, one of my main goals is lowering taxes for low and middle income american families. By lowering taxes for low and middle income families we will stimulate the economy. This is because low and middle income families are the families that reinvest the money they have most in the economy. These tax cuts could even pay themselves.

Chesapeake needs a new representative. A representative who will see problems in the eye. A representative who chooses tax cuts over unnecessary spending. A representative who cherishes fiscal responsibility and constraint. Chesapeake, let's make change happen!"

Mincoder walks down from the stage with a full plan for the day. Mincoder walks back with her staff to campaign headquarters. Back at headquarters a facebook live stream has been set up. Mincoder is going to be taking questions via facebook and answering them. Millaw sits down in front of the computer and begins to talk:

"Hello Chesapeake. nice to see that 2000 people have tuned into this stream. I will now be taking your questions. So just ask away!"

Almost immediately a question came in from David Harley:

"What departments do you want to decrease funding for?"

Mincoder answers:

"This is a hard question. But I believe in cutting the defense department to some extent. While defense is important, the US is spending much more on defence than necessary. I would also prioritise medicare and medicaid so that the programs only go to those who truly need the programs. In general however, I wish to use increased carbon taxes to fund programs when necessary, and many of the tax cuts I propose will be self financing to some extent."

Another question came in from Arney King:

"Why is medicare for all bad?"

Mincoder answers:

"There are a lot of problems with medicare for all. For example, it would create wait times. Ask any country with a similar system, Sweden, Denmark, etc. They will all tell you about the wait times in their healthcare system. These wait times kill. People cannot get their care in a timely enough fashion. The only way to make sure that we do not get those wait times here is by keeping healthcare private. Medicare for all would also cost a lot of money and be more expensive. In medicare for all you also have no choice in plan. As an American, I value choice above all else. I will be taking one more question."

A last question came in from ZlantanLober:

"Why should billionaires exist?"

Mincoder answers:

"Billionaires are a necessity for the American dream. Billionaires are often self made and have greatly improved the lives that we live. Jeff Bezos has increased the quality of life for billions of people, should he not be rewarded for that? Billionaires should exist because we should not limit other peoples prosperity, simply. Anyway, I would like to thank all of you for participating in this stream. It has been great to have you and to answer your questions!"

Mincoder then went and picked up the posters at campaign headquarters. As tradition demanded, more posters have to be put up. She went out into the sun and metup with the journalists who were to follow with her when she put up the posters.

Mincoder looked around for a suitable spot and put up her first poster.

When asked what the poster meant Mincoder answered:

“This poster discusses the need for an environmental policy that is in focus. The environment is important, but we need to take into consideration ordinary Americans. An environmental policy that attacks capitalism and the working class instead of working with it and for them will fail and create more destruction in the end. I believe this is what is unique about my environmental policy.”

Mincoder looked for another spot to put up a poster and found one.

Mincoder was asked by journalists what she wanted to say with the poster, she answered:

"This posters brings up how tax cuts for lower and middle class families can stimulate the economy. When people get some more money in their pocket, they will spend it in for example a farmers market, that will increase the farmers wealth and allow him to expand his operations and produce more food, growing the economy. All from some tax cuts. But I think these were all the posters I had. So I will have to thank you for this time!"

Mincoder proceed with her say to the soup kitchen. The soup kitchen is a charity event in one of the poorer neighborhoods in charlotte. The local police force and volunteers offer people free soup. When Mincoder arrived to the soup kitchen she began making soup. This time the soup kitchen was serving onion and potato soup. The entire ordeal was being live streamed on the Mincoder facebook page.

After her shift she had a recorded conversation with the organisers of the soup kitchen:

"Hi! I would like to thank you for allowing me to be a volunteer at the soup kitchen."

"No problem" the organiser responded.

"I am currently running to sponsor initiatives like the soup kitchen. We need to bring police and citizens in crime prone areas together. By creating true confidence between them we can finally get to the root of crime. It will also serve as an incredible social service to impoverished areas." Mincoder continued

"We thank you for that. You know, many of the people who eat our soup live on the streets. They used to steal food to live many of them, not anymore." the organiser said.

"That is amazing" Mincoder responded.

Mincoder and the organiser took a selfie that was posted to the Mincoder facebook page. After a long day of campaigning. Mincoder went home and took a selfie which she posted to her instagram with the caption "I would like to thank everyone who has worked on this campaign, you made this possible. #bigwin2020”

