

Making Divorce Pay: The Association of Family and Conciliation Courts takes back -scratching to a new level By Michael Volpe, Organization Trends, July 2015

(PDF here) Summary: You've probably never heard of the Association of Family and Conciliation Courts, but its 5,000-plus members are lawyers, judges, and family court professionals who have enormous power in family legal disputes. The group claims to be guided by "the best interest of the child," but it is beyond dispute that it serves well the financial interests of its members, who are able to require the use of each other's services and force parents to pay.

Members also make use of dubious psychological theories that can do injustice to parents as well as children.

What if George Orwell had written a sequel to Nineteen Eighty-Four called Twenty-Fifteen? In it, nefarious puppeteers use the family court system to usurp decisions traditionally left to parents. They justify infringing parental rights by using noble-sounding phrases like "in the best interest of the child" to take away more and more decision-making authority from parents. Americans' First, Second, Fourth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights seem certain to be trampled routinely, and the reason given will always be because the decision was "in the best interest of the child." This group of manipulators is bold and brazen because it knows the media will have no appetite for any story of this kind, but will deem it a case of "he said/she said" and a private matter best left unchronicled. Motivated by profit and sometimes by ideology, these busybodies have figured out that controlling parental decisions is profitable. Unfortunately, this scenario is not a dystopian society in a science fiction novel; it is the way things really are in the family court system nowadays.

“It’s an American holocaust,” said Susan Skipp. She should know. Though she was the victim of domestic violence, she hasn’t seen either of her two children in nearly three years. The judge and many other players in Skipp’s family court nightmare are all affiliated with the same group: the Association of Family and Conciliation Courts (AFCC).
