Healthcare is so important because it helps us stay healthy and treats us when we are sick. It should be available for all, no matter how much money they have. However, healthcare is expensive to give it to all.

If a person gets sick and cannot afford to see a doctor or get medicine, it would be very unfair. Healthcare is a basic right for all, just like food and education. On the other hand, healthcare can be expensive and if it's given for free, it might be difficult to pay for all the doctors, nurses, or medicine.

Persons with low incomes nearly one-third of whom are uninsured, have worse access to health services in the community.

Namibia's healthcare fell behind. The country must overcome obstacles to continue improving obstacles including a shortage of doctors, inadequate funding, and also HIV/ AIDS and tuberculosis crises.
