Someone falls in a hole on the c Anchor 1: The teachers of New Vista do a great job on keeping the students' inequitable comments in check in the classroom, but what about outside of classes?

Anchor 2: That's a good point (BLANK), and in order to address this, New Vista has introduced a new method of enforcing equity norms in the hallways. The first trial of this new program is being tested with the help of three members of the New Vista Restorative Justice team.

Anchor 1: Let's go to the field to see what this new method is.

Field Reporter: Hi guys, (BLANK) here, and I'm about to interview the three RJ members taking on the new equity enforcement methods here at New Vista. They should be on their way now.

slow motion shot of three kids walking down hallway with sunglasses on or something

Field Reporter: Alright so I'm here with Jalen, Livi, and Nicolette, three members of New Vista's very own Restorative Justice team, and they are the first to be trained in these new equity methods. Now, can one of you tell me about this new program?

Nicolette: Well, it's really not all that new of a concept, it's based around our already-standing tradition of equity checks. So, whenever the students are at break, Livi, Jalen, and I are on duty in the hallways, monitoring for any signs of inequity.

Livi: It's actually a pretty great program I would say, I really think it will reduce the amount of inequitable comments made in our hallways.

Jalen: Yeah, and since so many people already do equity checks, we really don't think it will be disruptive at all.

Field Reporter: Well, it sounds great guys! And let me just thank you guys personally on behalf of our school, for volunteering to help make it a better place.

Nicolette: Oh, it's our pleasure, (BLANK). We just really care about the students and the school.

Field Reporter: Well, there you have it folks, now let's get some footage of this new method in action.

montage of Jalen, Livi, and Nicolette wearing sunglasses and slamming kids into lockers after they make an inequitable comment

quick cut to shot of Ivette

Ivette: You know, I am just so excited about this new program. Research has shown that the physical aspects of equity hip checking really decreases inequitable behavior in students all over the country, and I am so proud that our school is the first school to incorporate it in BVSD. I think it's yet another great thing that makes New Vista, New Vista.

continuation of montage

Field Reporter: Well, as you can clearly see, New Vista has introduced yet another great program to keep our students feeling safe. With so many great programs like this being used, things can only get better. Back to the studio.
