Description: In prior classes we have examined the ways in which socio-cultural contexts promulgate demands for people to shape themselves according to particular norms, often impeding their capacity to live an authentic life. But the ideal of authenticity also has a socio-cultural context. In today's class we are going to look at one thread in the complex weave of Western culture that has given rise to an ethic of authenticity, an ethic that is often valorized in psychoanalysis. We'll examine the cultural location of this ethic cross-culturally (especially in comparison with contemporary China) and historically (looking at the rise of a deep interest in emotional introspection in the modern West). We'll broach some of the questions this raises about the role that psychoanalysis plays in promoting particular cultural values while also challenging other contemporary norms.

Program Objectives:

At the end of the program, participants will be able to:

1. Discuss the different attitudes toward affective attunement in Chinese and Euro-American childrearing practices.
2. Briefly describe the rise in early Western modernity of two values that support psychoanalytic aims: affectionate bonds in family life and individualistic personal expression in the arts.
3. Identify how psychoanalysis, as culturally located and influenced, promotes ideals that are themselves culturally specific.

Required Readings:

1. Harlem, A. (2009). Thinking through others: Cultural psychology and the psychoanalytic treatment of immigrants. Psychoanalysis, Culture & Society, 14, 273-288.
