As students are preparing to move on soon to college and/or career, they need to be able to critically analyze media, perspectives and ideas they'll encounter beyond the classroom. They need to be familiar with the tools authors use, and to use these tools themselves to communicate effectively considering purpose and audience. The literary devices, analysis, and writing strategies will be the foundation upon which the rest of the year's knowledge, understanding and skills will be built. Summative: real life application, analyzing rhetoric in text of their choice	Building from a general understanding of rhetoric, students will analyze the themes of American identity and the American dream through various perspectives, including their own. Studies will provide students with the tools to evaluate the messages and mediums they encounter in their own world/ the "real" world.	In the first semester, students developed tools to think critically about texts and mediums. Moving into the second semester, students utilize these tools to evaluate and craft multi-sourced arguments. Students are also asked to consider how embellishment of "truth" and facts can impact a story's message and lead to the author's purpose for writing.	The end of the year is marked with exploring personal narratives, both in reading and writing. The year-long focus on rhetoric culminates in students composing their own varied samples of rhetoric: presentation of individually-driven research and composition of first-person narration. The final text study allows students to explore diverse paths and cultures. Exposure to global perspectives enriches their understanding and connection to their community and world.
