

Congressman Golux, his House Staff and friend u/FreshLlama are gathered outside a forest at the Pine Hill Plantation Hunting Lodge in Georgia in hunting camo. While his staff and friends load their shotguns Congressman Golux turns to a small pool of reporters and begins talking

G: Obviously growing up in rural Georgia hunting has played and still does play an important part of my life. It's part of why I believe so strongly in the 2nd amendment. Now I was very surprised when I found out that my longtime personal friend FreshLlama had never been on a turkey shoot. I guess they do things differently up in Yankee land chuckles. But if he is going to be friends with the senator for the great state of Dixie frankly that has to change. So my staff and I got him to fly down here this morning and now here we are camo'd up and ready to get us some birds!

*Congressman Golux and party enter the woods. The sounds of turkey calls and gunshots can be heard breaking the otherwise silent afternoon. A few hours later the party emerges from the woods, Congressman Golux is holding a 25-pound turkey meanwhile assemblyman Llama is holding a bag of beans.

G: Well now as fun as this all was it does bring up a very important point, the 2nd amendment. The right bare arms both from recreation and most importantly protection is a part of what makes our country great and is something I personally hold sacred. Therefore I give my word that I will always vote to protect the rights of gun owners and hunters, regardless of how party higher-ups may feel about it! Now, ladies and gentlemen, I have a bird to cook! We tried to give Llama a real taste of Dixie culture but when he had a bird in his sights he put his gun down and said "meat is murder" and pulled out a bag and started pickin beans. I really don't get Yankees but he seemed to have a good time.
