Indiana University's Teaching for Student Success | Foundational Modules

Throughout the Foundational Modules of Teaching for Student Success, we will revisit this Course Alignment Map. If you are pursuing the certificate, you will submit your completed Course Alignment Map for your artifact submission. Save your Course Alignment Map in an easy-to-find folder, as you will build and revise it over the course of the first four modules.

In Module 1, add your course-level learning outcomes to the table titles, using one course-level outcome per table. Recall that course-level learning outcomes tend to be broader and span the entire course. This guide contains tables for up to 8 course-level learning outcomes; delete or add tables as needed to complete your Course Alignment Map.

Next, write the corresponding unit-level learning outcomes in the first column of each table. Recall that unit-level learning outcomes directly support student achievement of the course-level outcomes and should be achievable upon completion of a single unit of instruction.

In Modules 2 and 3, you will work on the Assessment Methods Column. Module 3 invites you to reconsider decisions you made after completing Modules 1 and 2.

In Module 4, you will revisit your Course Alignment Map after considering the first student-facing document you will provide to your students as well as your first interactions with them.

As you build your Course Alignment Map, add your ideas for learning activities and learning materials to columns 3 and 4. Keep in mind that anything you add to these columns should directly support the learning outcomes and assessment methods.

You can build on and refine your Course Alignment Map by completing the other two Teaching for Student Success paths: the Active Learning path and the Diversity, Equity, Inclusion & Justice path.
