The average lifespan of roofs is 20 years. But accidents can drive homeowners to have parts of their roof repaired or even overhauled way before that, especially in the Lowcountry area where weathering and overloading are more common than other regions due to our humid climate. Delta Roofing offers roof installation services in Hilton Head Island with a full range from repairs to replacement, so don't wait until something unfortunate happens!

Here are some common types of damage that, when left untreated, can lead to more severe long-term consequences:

1. Leaks

Leaking roofs can cause extensive damage to your home if left unrepaired. These leaks often occur due to wear and tear on roofing materials or from a storm, but you should always trust the professionals at Delta Roofing for any water leak repair services. Uncovering hidden sources of these leaks may involve climbing up onto your rooftop with help from our experts to make sure that every inch is inspected thoroughly.

While it might be tempting for some homeowners to think they could fix an issue like this themselves, we recommend taking advantage of our expertise and getting covered under homeowner's insurance policies when possible so you don't have long-term problems down the road.
