I personally think that gift cards can make good gifts if they are given the right way – even for a wedding. Here are my tips for giving gift cards without being tacky. In terms of gift giving, gift cards might be preferable if you have no idea what to buy for someone on your gift list, as they allow giftcardmall/mygift the recipient to buy what they want and when they want. Just keep in mind that if you're choosing closed-loop gift cards over open-loop cards, that limits the giftee's options for where they can use the cards.

The card must be used within a specified amount of time or it will become unusable. Some gift cards, particularly those issued by banks, have fees for specific events. Gift cards are typically limited to a single store or set of stores, but prepaid cards can be used anywhere that supports the electronic payment network such as visa or mastercard. Therefore, prepaid cards are often more versatile. Another problem arises if you want to return something you purchase with a gift card.

Debit cards are linked to a checking account, whereas prepaid cards are not and must be loaded with money. Although neither card helps you develop credit, both prepaid cards and debit cards can help you manage your money in various ways. A prepaid card makes it easier to spend within confines compared to a debit card.

Only a specified quantity of money is contained within it. Once this amount is depleted, the card can no longer be used. In some ways, it represents many features of money but it is also more restricted compared to normal cash.
