

Making Divorce Pay: The Association of Family and Conciliation Courts takes back -scratching to a new level

By Michael Volpe, Organization Trends, July 2015 (PDF here)

Summary: You've probably never heard of the Association of Family and Conciliation Courts, but its 5,000-plus members are lawyers, judges, and family court professionals who have enormous power in family legal disputes. The group claims to be guided by "the best interest of the child," but it is beyond dispute that it serves well the financial interests of its members, who are able to require the use of each other's services and force parents to pay. Members also make use of dubious psychological theories that can do injustice to parents as well as children.

What if George Orwell had written a sequel to Nineteen Eighty-Four called Twenty-Five? In it, nefarious puppeteers use the family court system to usurp decisions traditionally left to parents. They justify infringing parental rights by using noble-sounding phrases like "in the best interest of the child" to take away more and more decision-making authority from parents. Americans' First, Second, Fourth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights seem certain to be trampled routinely, and the reason given will always be because the decision was "in the best interest of the child." This group of manipulators is bold and brazen because it knows the media will have no appetite for any story of this kind, but will deem it a case of "he said/she said" and a private matter best left unchronicled. Motivated by profit and sometimes by ideology, these busybodies have figured out that controlling parental decisions is profitable.

Unfortunately, this scenario is not a dystopian society in a science fiction novel; it is the way things really are in the family court system nowadays.

"It's an American holocaust," said Susan Skipp. She should know. Though she was the victim of domestic violence, she hasn't seen either of her two children in nearly three years. The judge and many other players in Skipp's family court nightmare are all affiliated with the same group: the Association of Family and Conciliation Courts (AFCC).

Excerpts "Program produces motherless kids

6 novembre 2003

par Liz Richards

I have been organizing litigating mothers since 1995, when certain Northern Virginia fathers' rights leaders told me they were using a federal custody program for scorched-earth retaliation against mothers.

My databank of more than 850 "intake" callers includes 80 Northern Virginia case complaints, many of whom have been affected by the fathers' rights agenda. While they talk "oint custody" and "co-parenting," what they really produce is legal harassment and motherless children.

People assume courts are biased in favor of mothers, but there is a deep hostility toward mothers who complain. Counterintuitive sympathy toward men as underdogs frequently results in backlash attacks.

Men use this phenomena to win custody and reduced support obligations - even instigating altercations to provoke complaints. Men have learned they can lie in court and blame their own misconduct on the woman. Few challenge them, while mothers are told to shut up - even by their own family and attorneys.

The men who are organized as fathers' advocates are actually a branch of a secretive, California-based judicial organization, the Association of Family and Conciliation Courts, which set them up for the purpose of instigating litigation. The Children's Rights Council and the American Coalition for Fathers and Children are Virginia-based groups prominent in this movement.

The CRC is heavily cross-affiliated with, and get members' cases steered to, AFCC judges and court professionals. This conflict of interest is never disclosed by the AFCC professionals.

CRC is also affiliated with pro-pedophilia psychologists Richard Gardner and Ralph Underwager, who devised highly discredited pro-abuser/pedophilia court methodologies for covering up abuse and awarding custody to fathers.

The AFCC and CRC set up a federal "model custody" program based on Gardner's methodologies, even though he is condemned as a pedophile advocate by many legal professionals. " See Hard copy
