SL: The Great stories around your Business

Hey Julia,

In a world where technologies and AI getting more and more a part of our lives, it's further important than ever to remember our roots and where we come from.

That's the reason I got relay Inspired by your work.

The handmade product, the love for details, and the time you investing making your Product with natural materials are astonishing.

Building your business around Pagan tradition gives you the opportunity to tell your customers the great stories around the Products and get them more in touch with it.

In this way, it's possible to reach more customers and motivate your loyal ones to buy more of your Products.

As a big lover of Pagan mythology, traditions, and wisdom as well as someone who is interested in supporting and improving your company, I allowed myself to write you an Email to recruit your Skoll and Hati Altar.

(not sure If this is too much personal from my side. I tried to get a great connection between me and the owner)

Let me know If you like the Idea and if you want more.

kind regards,
Lucas

SL: End of Days

Once there was a Man who has two children. A Son is called Mani, symbolizing the moon, and the daughter is called Sol, symbolizing the Sun.

Both of them were incredibly beautiful and so the Man decided to marry her to a Man called Glenur.

The gods were angry with this decision and so they take the siblings and set them into the sky.

The siblings were placed in a chariot and traveled across the firmament.

Mani determined the course of the Moon and Sol determined the course of the sun

Both of them never stopped and were in an unbelievable hurry cause they were chased by two wolves

One is called Skoll and the other is called Hati.

Hati chases the Moon across the night sky just like his brother Skoll chases the Sun during the day, in the hope to devour them.

They chase Sol and Mani day after day, night after night until the time of Ragnarok comes.

At the downfall of the Cosmos and the End of the World, they catch up with their target and swallow the Sun and the Moon so the sky and earth darken and collapse.

Fenrir, the giant Wolf, breaks free and finishes what's left.
