First of this. No problem with it, just thank you. It's a thing of beauty.

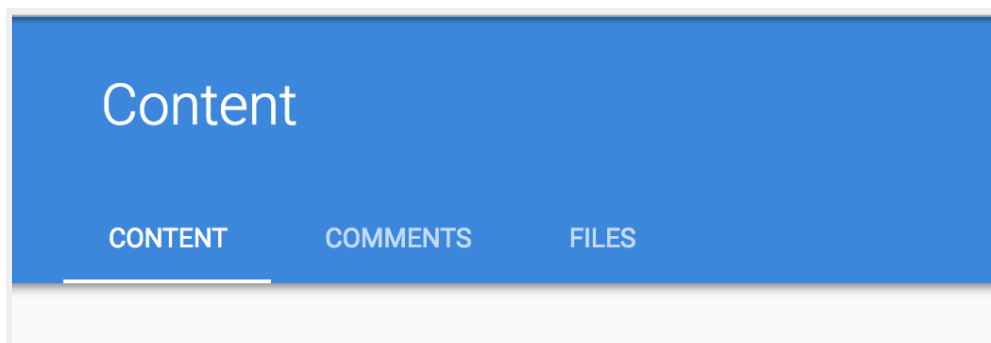

With the breadcrumbs there's a lot of vertical space taken up at the top here. Maybe not have breadcrumbs by default? Also the red for third level tabs makes them look like errors.

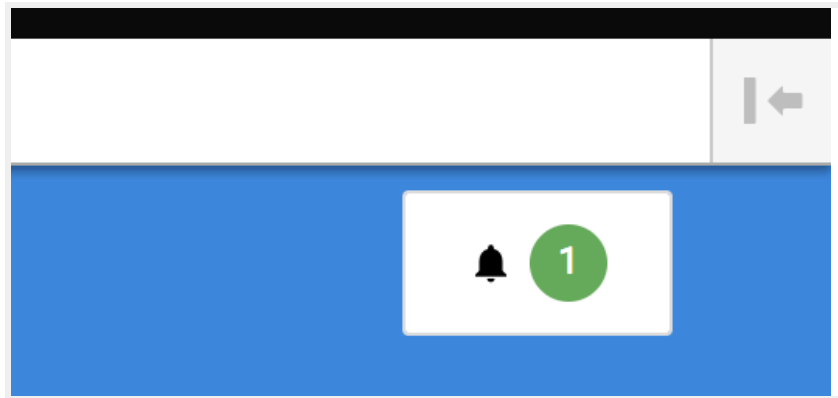

When I take them out the shadow looks awkward with the underline.

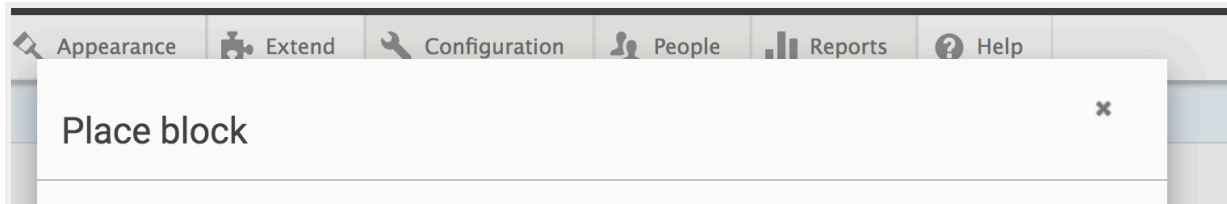

Looks a bit better with .z-depth-2

I like this but it feels 'stuck on' it really belongs in the toolbar (I understand the problem with that) but in this context maybe white icon, white circle, green number?
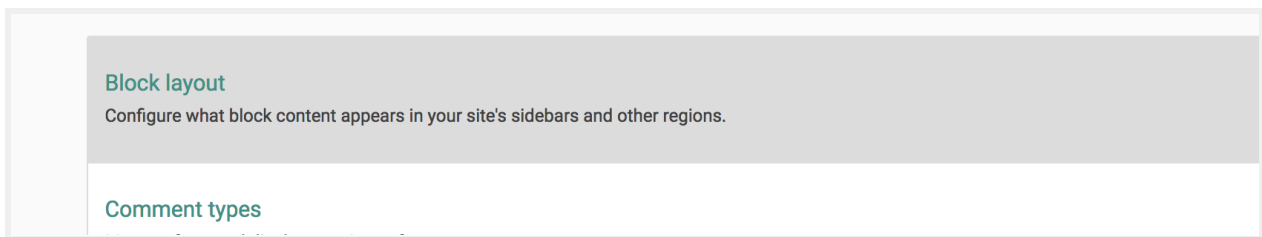

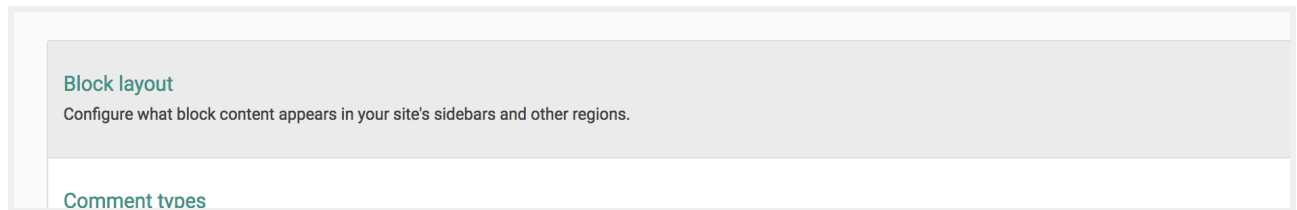

In the modal the close button is awkwrdly positioned.

If you take out the absolute top value it centers nicely.

On the hover state for list items and rows I think the contrast with the heading is too low for WCAG.

I think #eee would be better.

On the action button the positioning of the 'plus' is a little odd, and it's small and light-weight. I actually think this would be a great place (only place) to use the floating action button. Also the pink here also looks like an error red to me.

Or alternately just make some tweaks.

The position of the checkinside the checkbox looks a bit high. Top: 2px fixes it.

When the fixed bottom submits are enabled ()which by-the-way, I LOVE) they feel cramped.
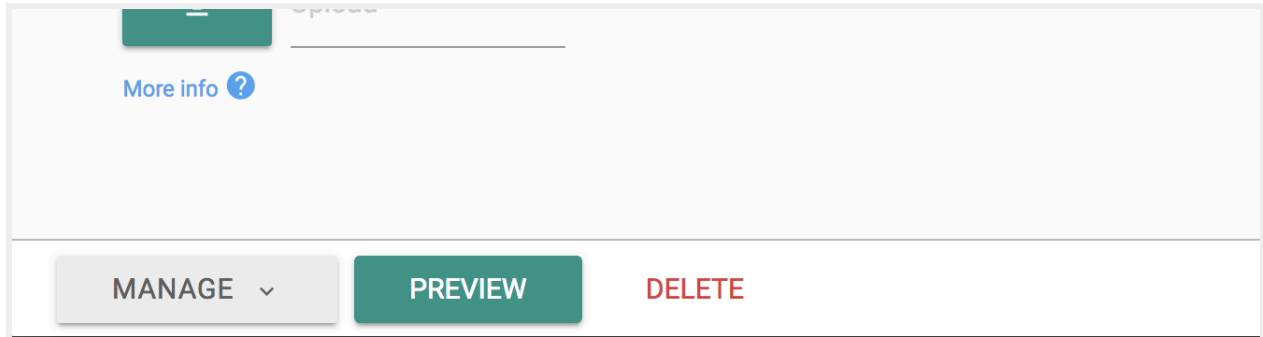

I feel like they need 1rem all around. Also, here preview looks like the primary action.
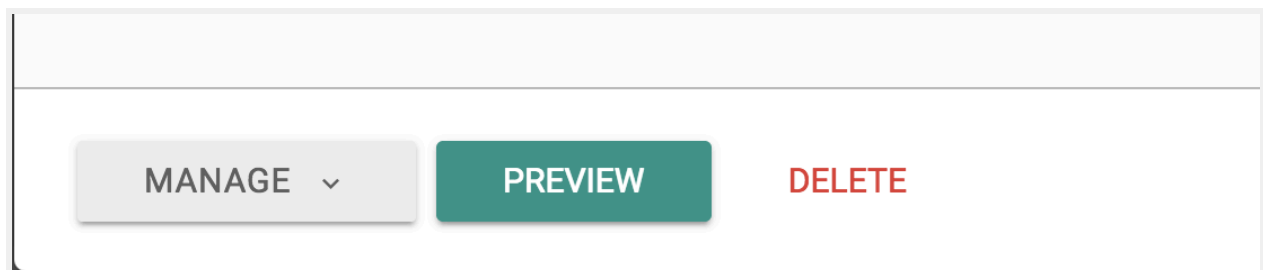

On the tags field I think that's supposed to be the autocomplete icon over there on the right but it doesn't seem to work.

Also, making the info link display inline-block everywhere would go a long way to giving back some vertical space.

The blue background for the region rows is too close in value to the hover color of rows.

Personally I Think a white background would be fine, it still has a subtle contrast to the page background and if you bump up the type weight or color it creates enough diffgerence.
