This story is about a little boy who picked up a stone in his aunt's yard and went out to play with it as a good brother, played football, played football together and went to school together, but he lost it when he went out to play. I love this story because I also made friends with inanimate things when I was a kid. I think something inanimate is a great friend because it doesn't reject you or betray you or betray you and can be there for you all the time. So I think this story shares my thoughts and it is a very interesting story. And I really like the way this story is expressed in comics. The comics have a lot of pictures that allow me to better understand the situation the author wants to describe and also make me more immersed in the story.I hope there will be more comics in the future to make my English learning process less boring.
