The proposed Cyber Resilience Act (CRA) has some concerning implications:

1. It would reduce the number of OSS projects available to European SMEs giving more power to large corporations;
2. Jeopardize the fragile equilibrium that benefits SMEs contributing to European innovations;
3. And shift away from the security of products available to consumers.

We need to modify the CRA to meet the needs of the open source community!

At the time of increasing awareness of the challenges to European digital sovereignty and European open strategic autonomy, Europe needs a strong open source software (OSS) community supportive of SMEs, startups and scaleups, but also accountability of large corporations in increasing cybersecurity.

However, the proposed Cyber Resilience Act (CRA) does not meet the needs of the European open source software (OSS) industry participants and must be modified.
