Evaluation Criteria	Description of Criteria	Findings
		Yes	No	Remarks
Content and Substance
Novelty of research	Research provides a new perspective on the topic, offers a different methodology, and/or may lead to a unique framework that may help understand the issue(s) about the topic.
Adequacy of research design	The overall design sufficiently meets the objectives.
Suitability of methods	Sampling methods, data collection tools, and data gathering procedures are appropriate.
Potential value of the field of knowledge/ Potential practical value	Research has potential contribution(s) to the field of language and literacy education.
Sensitivity of content (and language)	The research is gender and culture-sensitive both in terms of content and language use.

Ethical soundness	The proposed research passes basic ethical standards, especially with human participants in terms of data gathering techniques, choosing the participants, following informed consent rules and non-disclosure agreements, respecting confidentiality, and so on.
Feasibility within time allowed	Timetable given the set of activities described elsewhere in the proposal is realistic. The time allotment (2 to 4 semesters) for thesis writing (from proposal writing to defense) is achievable.
Writing Mechanics
Language	Language use exhibits scholarship and lacks grammatical errors.
Organization	There is a logical flow of ideas from one paragraph to the next. The parts of the proposal are well-organized.
	The research introduction is well-formulated based on pieces of evidence that support the topic.
	The research problem is clearly stated and appropriately motivates the undertaking of the research.
	Prior works on the topic are included and adequately analyzed in the literature review.
	The discussions on the various parts of the research methodology are comprehensively described.
