H3: The Short Answer:

A personal injury lawyer represents people injured by someone else's negligence—helping them recover compensation for medical bills, lost wages, and pain and suffering. These lawyers handle accident investigations, negotiate with insurance companies, file lawsuits when necessary, and resolve outstanding medical debts. They work on a contingency fee basis and are committed to acting in their clients' best interests.

H3: Key Takeaways:

- Personal injury lawyers represent individuals, not companies or insurance carriers.
- They handle cases like car crashes, falls, dog bites, wrongful death, and more.
- They investigate accidents, gather evidence, and determine liability.
- They negotiate settlements with insurance companies and file lawsuits if needed.
- They work on a contingency fee basis, so clients don't pay unless they win.
- They help reduce medical bills and liens after a case is settled.
- They act in the client's best interest throughout the legal process.
- Over 12,000 attorneys are licensed in Alabama—but only some focus on personal injury, like Those Thumbs Up Guys®.
- Floyd Hunter Injury Law offers free consultations and serves injured clients across central Alabama.

H1: What Does a Personal Injury Lawyer Do in Alabama?

There are many different types of lawyers—corporate attorneys handle business transactions, insurance defense lawyers protect companies from liability, and personal injury attorneys fight for individuals who have been hurt due to someone else's negligence.

Personal injury lawyers, also called plaintiff's attorneys, represent real people—those seriously injured in accidents or harmed by others. Their job is to help you pursue compensation for your losses, including:

- Medical bills
- Lost wages
- Pain and suffering
- Ongoing care needs

But their role goes beyond just listing damages. They bring resources, experience, and advanced knowledge that comes from years of dealing with these situations. In Alabama alone, there are over 12,000 actively licensed attorneys, but not all of them represent injury victims. Choosing a lawyer who focuses on personal injury law can make a significant difference in the outcome of your case.

H2: Types of Cases Personal Injury Lawyers Handle

Personal injury lawyers handle a wide range of cases involving physical, emotional, or financial harm. At Floyd Hunter Injury Law, we assist clients in cases such as:

- Car accidents
- Truck accidents
- Motorcycle accidents
- Pedestrian and bicycle accidents
- Rideshare \(Uber/Lyft\) accidents
- Slip and fall or premises liability injuries
- Dog bites and animal attacks
- Wrongful death
- Medical malpractice
- Workers' compensation

Some injuries are more serious and may involve long-term care or life changes. These cases can include:

- Spinal cord injuries
- Traumatic brain injuries

Each situation is different. The type of case affects what evidence is needed, how fault is determined, and how compensation is calculated. If you're not sure whether your situation qualifies as a personal injury case, speaking with a lawyer can help you understand where you stand and what options may be available.

H2: How Personal Injury Lawyers Help

Personal injury lawyers guide clients through every step of the legal process. We know you're probably dealing with pain, doctor's appointments, missed work, calls from the insurance company, and more. It's overwhelming and stressful. An attorney can take that burden off of your shoulders so you can focus on getting better.

H3: 1. Free Case Evaluations

Your attorney will start by reviewing your situation and explaining your legal options. At Floyd Hunter, we offer free, no-obligation consultations to help you understand your rights. If you decide to hire a lawyer, then we'll move to the next step.

H3: 2. Investigation and Evidence Gathering

Building a strong case starts with finding detailed evidence. Your lawyer will look at how the accident happened and help find the evidence that supports your case. This includes:

- Collecting accident reports and medical records
- Interviewing witnesses and taking statements
- Working with accident reconstruction experts
- Reviewing insurance policies and employer documentation
- Establishing proof of lost income

H3: 3. Dealing With the Insurance Company

If the insurance company contacts you after an accident, you may not know what to say or what to avoid saying. A personal injury lawyer can deal with the insurance company for you, respond to requests, and protect your interests during the claims process.

H3: 4. Demand Letters and Insurance Negotiations

Once liability and damages are established, your attorney prepares a demand letter. This outlines the facts of the case and the amount of compensation you're seeking. It creates a clear picture of your claim and starts the settlement process. Your lawyer then negotiates with the insurance company to pursue a fair settlement.

Most personal injury cases settle out of court. But if negotiations fail, your lawyer is prepared to go to trial.

H3: 5. Filing a Lawsuit and Litigation (If Necessary)

If necessary, your attorney will file a formal complaint and guide you through the litigation process, which may include:

- Discovery (exchange of evidence)
- Depositions
- Mediation
- Trial

At this stage, your lawyer continues building your case, responds to the other side, and prepares to present your case as strongly as possible. Even if your case doesn't go to trial, hiring a lawyer who is ready for that process can make a difference.

H3: 6. Maximizing Settlements and Resolving Medical Bills

Your attorney's role doesn't end at the settlement. They also:

- Negotiate medical liens and bills
- Help discharge or reduce debt related to your injuries
- Distribute payments to pay bills and fees from your injury
- Ensure you receive your full compensation after fees and costs

Our goal is to leave you in the best possible financial position after your case is resolved. Settlement is only part of the picture. When you work with an attorney, we can help tie up all the loose ends.

H2: What Makes Personal Injury Lawyers Different?

Personal injury law focuses on helping people who have been hurt and are trying to move forward after an accident. Because of that, the role of a personal injury lawyer looks a little different from other types of attorneys. Here are a few things that set them apart:

- They represent individuals, not corporations or government agencies.
- They work on a contingency fee basis – you pay nothing upfront, and only owe a fee if they win your case.
- They act in the client's best interest at every stage—both legally and financially.
- They are often trial-ready, unlike many transactional attorneys.

- They understand medical records, injury recovery, and the impact of trauma on clients.

Personal injury attorneys must be compassionate, responsive, and committed to fighting for justice on behalf of everyday people just like you. Look for these qualities when hiring a lawyer. If you're not sure whether you need legal help, a free consultation can be a simple way to get answers.
