Traffic problems are becoming more serious in many cities around the world. Traffic congestion happens when there are too many vehicles on the road, and the road system cannot handle the volume. As a result, vehicles move slowly, and people spend more time traveling.

There are several reasons for traffic congestion. One major cause is the increase in the number of private cars. Many people prefer using their own vehicles instead of public transport because it is more convenient. In addition, road construction or accidents can reduce road capacity and make traffic worse.

To solve this problem, governments have introduced different measures. For example, some cities encourage people to use public transportation such as buses and trains. Others build more roads or improve traffic management systems. In some places, drivers must pay a fee to enter busy areas during peak hours.
